

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON
AT SEATTLE

CHINOOK INDIAN NATION, an Indian Tribe and a Washington nonprofit corporation, and as successor-in-interest to The Lower Band of Chinook Indians; and ANTHONY A. JOHNSON, individually and in his capacity as Chairman of the Chinook Indian Nation

Plaintiffs.

v.

RYAN K. ZINKE, in his capacity as Secretary of the U.S. Department of Interior; U.S.
DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR; BUREAU OF
INDIAN AFFAIRS, OFFICE OF FEDERAL
ACKNOWLEDGMENT; UNITED STATES OF AMERICA; and MICHAEL S. BLACK, in his capacity as Assistant Secretary – Indian Affairs,

Defendants.

Case No.

COMPLAINT

Plaintiff alleges:

INTRODUCTION

1.

This is an action brought by the Chinook Indian Nation (“Chinook” or “Tribe”), and as successor-in-interest to The Lower Band of Chinook Indians. This action is brought under the U.S. Constitution, the Administrative Procedures Act (“APA”), 5 U.S.C. §§ 500, et

1 seq., 554, 701-706, and Declaratory Judgment Act to address the deprivation of rights,
2 privileges, and immunities secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States, and 3 upon 28 U.S.C. § 2412, the Equal Access to Justice Act, which authorizes the award of 4 attorney fees and costs to the prevailing plaintiffs in such actions.

5 2.

6 This Complaint seeks a Declaratory Judgment from the Court that the Treaty of 7 Tansey Point between the Defendant United States of America and the Lower Band of 8 Chinook Indians was thereafter constructively ratified by Congress through the Acts of 9 Congress of 1911, 1912, and 1925, as set forth in greater detail infra, and that the Chinook,
10 as successor-in-interest to the Lower Band of Chinook Indians is therefore entitled to be 11 acknowledged as a federally recognized sovereign Indian nation under federal common 12 law, or under governing federal statutes, or, alternatively, Plaintiffs seek a declaration from 13 this court that the actions of Congress and the over 100-year course of dealing between the 14 Defendants and the Chinook has resulted in de facto or constructive federal 15 acknowledgment of the Chinook as an Indian Tribe. In the alternative, without waiving the 16 above, Plaintiffs seek an order and judgment of this Court invalidating the Bureau of Indian 17 Affairs ("BIA") regulation prohibiting the Chinook, as a Tribe once denied formal 18 recognition from re-petitioning for recognition or reaffirmation of their federal tribal 19 status. In addition, the Chinook seek a declaratory judgment from this Court 20 acknowledging their right to monies appropriated to them by Congress and awarded to 21 them by the United States Court of Claims. Finally, because of the BIA's historical and 22 continuing mismanagement and malfeasance, the Chinook Indian Nation further seeks 23 injunctive relief and requests that a Special Master be appointed by the Court to monitor
24 agency action or inaction in response to this Court's orders.

25 ///

26 ///

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

3.

Jurisdiction is conferred by this Court by 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (federal question jurisdiction) because this action raises substantial questions of federal law under Plaintiff's Chinook Tribe's Treaties with the United States, the APA (5 U.S.C. §§ 554, 701-706, et seq.), federal common law and the Federally Recognized Indian Tribe List Act of 1994. 108 Stat. 4791 (1994) (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 5130).

4.

The United States has waived sovereign immunity from suit under 5 U.S.C. § 702 because Plaintiffs seek review of agency action and to mandate federal acknowledgment of the Chinook as a recognized Indian Tribe. This Court has personal jurisdiction over the Defendants pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e) as they are federal agencies and officers of the United States.

5.

Venue lies in this district because a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to the claims occurred in this district. 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e).

PARTIES

6.

Plaintiff Chinook Indian Nation is an Indian Tribe located and long present in the States of Washington and Oregon. Presently and since 2008, its principal location has been in Bay Center, Washington, at the north end of Willapa Bay. The Chinook Indian Nation is also a duly-recognized Washington, nonprofit corporation. The Chinook Indian Nation, including its predecessors-in-interest, is comprised as a single community and has existed as a community on a substantially continuous basis from historical times and certainly from 1900 to the present. The Chinook Indian Nation is the present-day political organization of, and successor-in-interest to The Lower Band of Chinook Indians,

1 Wau-ki-kum ("Wahkiakum") Band of Chinook Tribe of Indians, Weelappa ("Willapa") Band
2 of Chinook Indians, Cathlamet Band of Chinook Indians, and Clatsop Tribe of Indians, that 3 historically lived on both sides of the lower Columbia River and which were parties to the 4 treaties of Tansey Point signed in August 1851. Further, the Chinook Indian Nation is a
5 successor-in-interest to those Chinook Indians who participated in the Chehalis River
6 Treaty negotiations with Washington Territorial Governor Isaac Stevens in 1855 that 7 resulted in the Treaty of Olympia, ratified by Congress in 1859. The Chinook Indian Nation
8 and/or its members descend from the historic Chinook Tribe, including the Lower Band of 9 Chinook and Clatsop Tribe, that resided in the area of the lower Columbia River since time
10 immemorial and which has combined and functions as a single autonomous political entity
11 and has maintained political influence and authority over its members from historic times 12 to the present.

13 7.

14 The Chinook Indian Nation governs itself pursuant to a duly adopted constitution, 15 which was first drafted in 1925 and has since been amended (see Exhibit A attached). Its 16 members are descended from the Chinook Indians who signed the 1851 Tansey Point
17 treaties and who participated in the 1855 Chehalis River treaty negotiations and are a 18 distinctive, indigenous Indian Tribe that has resided near the mouth of the Columbia River 19 since time immemorial.

20 8.

21 The Chinook have satisfied all mandatory criteria established for federal 22 recognition, acknowledgment, or reaffirmation as an Indian Tribe by the U.S. Department of 23 Interior ("DOI") pursuant to applicable statutes and their implementing regulations and as 24 set forth in 25 C.F.R. § 83, including the regulations first promulgated in 1978, those 25 adopted in 1994, and the 2015 regulations which are currently in place. The Chinook 26 ///

1 constitute an "Indian Tribe," as that term is defined and applied in all laws and regulations
 2 applying to Indian Tribes administered by the DOI, and its members constitute "Indians" or 3 "members of an Indian Tribe," as those terms are defined and applied in those same laws
 4 and regulations.

5 9.

6 Plaintiff Anthony "Tony" A. Johnson is the elected Chairman of the Chinook Indian 7 Nation, authorized to bring this action on behalf of the Chinook and a direct descendent of 8 Lower Band of Chinook leaders who were signatories to the 1851 Tansey Point Treaty,
 9 referenced herein and of Chinook tribal members who participated in the 1855 Chehalis
 10 River treaty negotiations. Plaintiff Johnson and his Chinook ancestors have actively 11 pursued justice for the Chinook for more than a century.

12 10.

13 Defendant Ryan K. Zinke ("Zinke") is the Secretary of the U.S. Department of the 14 Interior.

15 11.

16 Defendant Michael S. Black ("Black") is the Acting Assistant Secretary - Indian 17 Affairs and is the highest ranking official in the BIA,<sup>1</sup> which has direct responsibility for 18 administering the acknowledgment procedures for Indian Tribes.

19 12.

20 Both Zinke and Black are officers or employees of the DOI and have direct or 21 delegated statutory duties for carrying out relations with the Indian Tribes and the United 22 States' obligations to Indian Tribes under 25 U.S.C. §§ 2 and 9. Both Zinke and Black are 23 named here in their official capacities. In that official capacity, Secretary Zinke is 24 responsible for the overall administration of the BIA, an agency within the DOI tasked with 25 ///

26

---

<sup>1</sup> The Office of Indian Affairs was renamed the Bureau of Indian Affairs by the DOI on September 17, 1947.

1 managing the federal government's relationship through various agreements with Indian
2 Tribes, Nations, and Bands within the United States. 43 U.S.C. § 1457.

3 13.

4 Among Assistant Secretary Black's duties and responsibilities is to make a final 5 decision on petitions for acknowledgment and reaffirmation of an Indian Tribe under the 6 authority delegated to him by the Secretary under 25 C.F.R. § 83, and to oversee monies
7 appropriated by Congress and held in trust for Indian Tribes and their members.

8 14.

9 Defendant Department of the Interior ("DOI") is a cabinet-level agency of the United 10 States and is responsible for managing the relations with Indian Tribes through the BIA and 11 its Assistant Secretary. The DOI is also responsible for promulgating regulations pursuant 12 to statutory authority granted to it by Congress, and insuring compliance with those 13 regulations.

14 15.

15 Defendant DOI, acting through the BIA and its Office of Federal Acknowledgment
16 ("OFA") (formerly the Branch of Acknowledgment and Research), is the administrative 17 agency that currently receives and processes applications from Indian groups for 18 recognition, acknowledgment, or reaffirmation of tribal status in accordance with 25 C.F.R.
19 Part 83 and the U.S. Constitution, statutes, regulations, treaties, and legal requirements.

20 16.

21 Defendant United States of America includes all government agencies and officers,
22 including the within named Defendants, charged with the administration of Indian affairs
23 and responsible for protection of property and rights of the Chinook, including under the 24 terms of the 1851 and 1855 treaties that are, in part, the subject of this action. Plenary
25 authority over Indian affairs is reserved to the U.S. Congress under Art. I, § 8, of the U.S.
26 Constitution.

1 ALLEGATIONS COMMON TO ALL CAUSES OF ACTION

2 17.

3 Federal acknowledgment or recognition of an Indian Tribe is essential for a tribe
4 and its members to be eligible for programs and services provided by the United States.
5 The Defendant Secretary maintains a list of all of those tribes which have been so
6 recognized. See 25 U.S.C. §§ 5130-31.

7 Federal recognition affords important rights and protections to Indian tribes,
8 including limited sovereign immunity, powers of self-government, the right
9 to control the lands held in trust for them by the federal government, and the 10 right to apply for a number of federal services. 'Federal recognition may arise from treaty, statute, executive or administrative order, or from a course of dealing with the tribe as a political entity.'

11 Kahawaiolaa v. Norton, 386 F.3d 1271, 1273 (9th Cir. 2004), quoting William C. Canby, Jr.,
12 American Indian Law in a Nutshell 4 (4th ed. 2004).

13 18.

14 The significance of formal recognition or acknowledgment of an Indian Tribe by the 15 DOI is underscored by the Federally Recognized Indian Tribe List Act of 1994, Pub. L.
16 103-454, 108 Stat. 4791, 25 U.S.C. § 479(a), et seq. Under that Act, a Tribe's inclusion on the 17 list of federally-recognized Tribes maintained by the DOI imposes upon the Secretary of the 18 Interior "specific obligations to provide a panoply of benefits and services to the Tribe and 19 its members.... Appearing on the List is a functional precondition to receipt of those 20 services. In addition to the BIA, other federal agencies which provide services to the Tribes 21 use the List to determine eligibility." House Rept. No. 103-781 at 3 (Oct. 3, 1994). These 22 services include, inter alia, health, probate, individual money accounts, economic 23 development support, and education.

24 19.

25 The Federally Recognized Indian Tribe List Act of 1994 also provides in pertinent
26 part that "Indian tribes presently may be recognized...by a decision of a United States Court.” Pub. L. 103-454, § 103(3). The Chinook have sought federal recognition diligently but unsuccessfully through the BIA’s “broken” and “inconsistent” acknowledgment process. In fact, the Chinook have exhausted the administrative remedies available through the BIA and OFA. Nonetheless, the Chinook have satisfied and presently are able to satisfy all of the criteria established for recognition or reaffirmation through common law, through treaties, through executive orders and/or Congressional legislation, and through a very lengthy course of dealing with the federal government. The Tribe therefore has resorted to this United States court to seek a Declaration that it is entitled to be recognized as a tribe by the defendants and that defendants should accordingly be enjoined to provide that formal recognition to the plaintiff Chinook Indian Nation.

FEDERAL RECOGNITION OF THE CHINOOK THROUGH COMMON LAW

20.

In Montoya v. United States, 180 U.S. 261 (1901), the Supreme Court adopted a four-part common law test for whether an Indian group constituted a tribe for the purpose of the Indian Depredation Act of 1891 (26 Stat. 851). See also U.S. v. Holliday, 70 U.S.407 and U.S. v. Sandoval, 231 U. S. 28. The Court in Montoya defined “tribe,” providing that members must be:

- (1) A body of Indians of the same or similar race;
- (2) United in a community;
- (3) Existing under one leadership or government; and
- (4) Inhabiting a particular though sometimes ill-defined territory.

180 U.S. 266. The Department of the Interior, in its Reconsidered Final Determination Against Federal Acknowledgment of the Chinook, did not dispute that the Chinook are comprised of a body of Indians of substantially the same race (in other words, not made up of members of other tribes). Further, the DOI found that even though the Chinook could demonstrate that it was united in a community and existing under one leadership or

1 government for the extended historical period required, the Chinook certainly had shown
2 that they had been doing so for decades. Finally, the DOI recognized that a large portion of 3 the Chinook still live in their historic territory around the mouth of the Columbia River.

4 21.

5 The Chinook clearly satisfy the requirements for common law recognition. It is 6 within the power of this Court to declare that the tribe is accordingly federally recognized,
7 25 U.S.C. §§ 479a, 479a-1, and to order that the Chinook Indian Nation be added to the 8 Federally Recognized Indian Tribe List, 25 U.S.C. § 5131.

9 FEDERAL RECOGNITION OF THE CHINOOK THROUGH TREATIES

10 1851 Tansey Point Treaties

11 22.

12 The 1850s was a decade of rapid settlement in the western United States, and – not 13 coincidentally – a period of frantic treaty negotiations. The federal government wanted
14 Indian lands for white settlers and instructed negotiators to relocate those Indians
15 remaining west of the Cascades in the then-Oregon Territory to less populated, arid land
16 east of the mountains. By that time, diseases contracted from the early explorers, fur
17 traders, and settlers had diminished Indian populations to a tiny fraction of their former 18 numbers. The Chinook, because of their historic dominance and location at the mouth of 19 the Columbia River where they began trade with whites in the late 18th century, were 20 particularly devastated by exposure to diseases to which they had no natural resistance.
21 By 1851, their numbers were estimated to be less than 400. Oregon Territorial
22 Superintendent of Indian Affairs Anson Dart was dispatched in 1851 to conclude treaties
23 with the Chinook and related bands at Tansey Point, near Astoria, Oregon.

24 23.

25 Superintendent Dart thereafter succeeded in securing signatures from the ancestors
26 of present tribal members in the treaties he negotiated with all of the Chinook, including the Lower Band of Chinook Tribe, Wheelappa ("Willapa") Band of Chinook Tribe, Wau-ki-kum ("Wahkiakum") Band of Chinook Tribe, and Clatsop Tribe. Under the terms of the treaties, the Chinook ceded lands and received certain reserved rights from the federal government. Dart forwarded these treaties to Washington, D.C., in November 1851. The treaties passed to President Fillmore on July 20, 1852, who, in turn, submitted them to the Senate on July 31 for ratification. Millions of acres ceded by the Chinook in the Tansey Point treaties were seized by the federal government shortly after the treaties were submitted to Congress for ratification. None of the treaties secured formal Congressional ratification, but rather remained in limbo. 32nd Congress, 1st Session, Senate Confidential Executive Documents Nos. 46, 50, 52, 53, and 54. See also Bernholz at 125 and Deloria and DeMallie, pp. 218-219, 223-228.

1855 Stevens Chehalis River Treaty Negotiations

24.

The Chinook participated in treaty negotiations with the federal government again in 1855 after creation of the Washington Territory, this time led by newly-appointed Washington Territorial Governor Isaac Stevens. Governor Stevens' goal was to remove the Indians from areas of white settlement. During negotiations, it became clear that the Chinook would be forced to leave their lower Columbia River homelands and join several other Tribes – including their historic adversaries, the Quinault – on a reservation to the north on the Washington coast. The Chinook did not want to abandon their traditional food sources and the land of their ancestors' graves for that of their historic enemies, the Quinaults, and refused to sign, as did the Chehalis and Cowlitz Tribes. From "Boston Men" to the BIA: The Unacknowledged Chinook Nation, pp. 268-69 (Robinson, John R.). The Quinault did sign, however.

///

///

25.

Finally, in 1859, the resulting treaty, the Treaty of Olympia, was ratified by Congress and the Chinook were included among the “fish-eating tribes” whom the federal government hoped would take advantage of its provisions. Later this treaty was favorably cited by the Supreme Court when considering Chinook land and compensation claims and allotments. Halbert v. United States, 283 U.S. 753, 51 S.Ct. 615 (1931):

[T]here were also provisions in the treaty ... consenting that the President might “consolidate” the Quinaielts and Quillehutes and “other friendly tribes,” whenever in his opinion the public interest and the welfare of the Indians would be promoted by it.... Our conclusion ... is that the Chehalis, Chinook and Cowlitz Tribes are among those whose members are entitled to take allotments within the Quinaielt Reservation, if without allotments elsewhere.

Both the Chehalis and Cowlitz Tribes have since been federally recognized, as have all other tribes ruled eligible for allotments on the Quinault Indian Reservation: Ozette (part of the Makah Indian Tribe), Queets (part of the Quinault Indian Nation), Shoalwater Bay, Quilleute, Quinault, and Hoh.

26.

In its review of the Cowlitz Indian Tribe’s Petition for Acknowledgement, the Branch of Acknowledgment and Research (“BAR”)<sup>2</sup> determined that the government’s mere willingness to participate in treaty negotiations constituted unambiguous prior federal acknowledgment, dramatically lowering the Cowlitz’s burden for demonstrating its case for official acknowledgment (see Reconsidered Final Determination for the Cowlitz Indian Tribe at 17). That same consideration was not given to the Chinook, whose acknowledgment petition ultimately failed before the BAR. In fact, of the Tribes that

///

<sup>2</sup> The Branch of Acknowledgment and Research was nested within the Bureau of Indian Affairs until July 27, 2003, when it was renamed the Office of Federal Acknowledgment, and now reports directly to the Deputy Assistant Secretary – Indian Affairs.

1 participated in the Chehalis River Treaty negotiations, only the Chinook remain
2 unacknowledged today.

3 FEDERAL RECOGNITION OF THE CHINOOK
4 THROUGH EXECUTIVE ORDER

5 27.

6 Congress abolished the practice of treaty-making after several Tribes aligned
7 themselves with the Confederacy during the Civil War and the military advantage of the 8 treaties declined. See The Incomplete Loom: Exploring the Checkered Past and Present of 9 American Indian Sovereignty, 64 Rutgers L. Rev. 471, 476, n. 28 (Jackson, Harry S. III)
10 (2012). Following the cessation of treaty-making, federal recognition of Tribes occurred
11 when the Executive Branch set aside certain federally-owned lands for the use of Indians
12 and Indian Tribes by Executive Order. This method was ended by Congress in 1919.

13 28.

14 Following the treaty negotiations with the Chinook in 1851 and 1855, two 15 Presidents were subsequently moved to grant some measure of relief to the Chinook
16 through Executive Orders. In 1866, President Andrew Johnson created the small 17 Shoalwater Bay Reservation, an area where a small number of Chinook and Chehalis had 18 congregated at the extreme north end of the Chinook's ceded territory. Pursuant to that 19 Order, provisions were made for locally-residing Chinook families to be enrolled and reside
20 on that reservation. Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties, Vol. I, Part III, at 924 (Kappler)
21 (1904).

22 29.

23 Seven years later, in 1873, President Grant greatly expanded the Quinault
24 Reservation (from 10,000 acres to 220,000 acres) to include sufficient land to 25 accommodate the Chinook and other non-Quinault "fish-eating" Indians. Id. at 923. While 26 large numbers of Chinook subsequently moved there in order to receive federal benefits,

1 they noted their Chinook identification on tribal documents and continued to participate in
2 Chinook community events in Bay Center on Willapa Bay and along the Columbia River. All
3 the while, Executive Branch officials treated the Chinook as a separate tribal entity.

4 FEDERAL RECOGNITION OF THE CHINOOK THROUGH
5 CONGRESSIONAL ACTION

6 30.

7 In addition to recognition through treaties and executive orders, Congress has 8 recognized certain Indian Tribes through federal legislation, either implicitly by legislating
9 with respect to a particular Tribe regarding some matter other than recognition, or by 10 expressly extending federal recognition.

11 31.

12 Over the past century, Congress has demonstrated its recognition of the Chinook in 13 several ways. First, Congress authorized two separate series of treaty negotiations with the 14 Chinook (first in 1851 and again in 1855), a standard which the BIA found in 2001 to 15 constitute “unambiguous prior federal acknowledgement” for the Cowlitz Indian Tribe 16 during its recognition petition – a petition which was considered concurrently with that of 17 the Chinook. Second, Congress appropriated money twice for the express purpose of 18 compensating the Chinook for land seized by the federal government following the 1851
19 treaties negotiated with the Chinook at Tansey Point, a standard which Assistant Secretary
20 of the Interior Gover later found to constitute constructive, statutory ratification of those 21 treaties. Third, Congress authorized lawsuits brought by the Chinook, recognizing the 22 Chinook as a tribal entity with standing to sue the federal government. Fourth, Congress
23 created the American Indian Policy Review Commission (“AIPRC”), a commission which 24 included members of Congress, and which found severe inadequacies in the process by 25 which Tribes could become federally recognized. AIPRC identified the Chinook as having 26 treaty rights and expressly recommended that they be formally recognized. Congress has

1 been clear: The Chinook are a Tribe deserving of federal recognition – an action which 2 would simply formalize their long-existing government-to-government relationship with 3 the United States.

4 32.

5 Further, there have been several instances of Congress appropriating funds for the 6 benefit of the Chinook, beginning in 1899. S. 1941, A Bill for the Relief of The Lower Band of 7 the Chinook Indians of the State of Washington (Dec. 20, 1899). On December 20, 1899,
8 Senator Turner from Washington introduced a bill, S. 1941, for the relief of The Lower 9 Band of the Chinook Indians of the State of Washington. That bill was initially referred to 10 the Senate Committee on Claims, but was later transferred to the Senate Committee on 11 Indian Affairs. Cong. Rec., Proceedings and Debates of the 56th Congress at 585. The Lower 12 Band of Chinook had filed a land claim against the federal government seeking 13 compensation for the millions of acres of land taken by the federal government following
14 the Tansey Point treaties – treaties which had (and have) remained in congressional limbo,
15 neither ratified nor rejected, since their signing in 1851.

16 33.

17 Congress also sought to make amends with the Chinook, admitting they had been 18 treated “shabbily” by the federal government in failing to ratify their 1851 treaties and the 19 manner in which they had been dealt with thereafter. In 1900, Congress granted the 20 Chinook authority to petition for annuities and it sent a federal investigator (McChesney)
21 out to Chinook country in 1906 to compile a federal enrollment roster so that federal 22 benefits could be properly distributed to them. Based in part on those findings, Congress
23 appropriated funds for the Chinook in 1912 in the exact amounts specified in the 1851
24 treaties. Those funds were expressly meant to compensate the Chinook for land seized
25 following the 1851 treaties. In 2001, DOI Assistant Secretary – Indian Affairs Gover (a 26 recognized national expert in federal Indian law) appropriately characterized this as evidence of “constructive ratification” by Congress of the 1851 treaty with the Lower Band of Chinook.

34.

The Indian Appropriation Act of 1906 is one of the first examples of Congress’ explicit discussion of reimbursing the Chinook for land ceded in the unratified treaties at Tansey Point in 1851. In a Senate committee hearing on that legislation, an insightful exchange took place:

Senator Fulton.... Years ago the Government entered into a treaty with the Lower Band of Chinook Indians, whereby the Government agreed to pay to the Indians a certain stipulated sum of money, and all their lands were to be ceded to the Government. The treaty was never ratified, but the Government, nevertheless, took their lands and the Indians were crowded off.

Senator Teller. They were never paid for their lands?

Senator Fulton. They never were paid a dollar for them....

* * *

Senator Clapp. It seems from this bill that the lands were sold and the proceeds covered into the Treasury. Is there anything to show how much was covered in?

Senator Fulton. Yes, sir; the Land Department could ascertain that.

Senator Clapp. Have you any idea what it was?

Senator Fulton. It was a good many millions. I do not know just how much territory the Lower Band of Chinooks gave, but it was several millions.

* * *

Senator Clapp. You claim that we took the land and sold it?

Senator Fulton. Yes, sir; there were several Tribes in the same situation.

Senator Teller. Did we take any more of the Indians’ lands than were sold?

Senator Fulton. We sold it all; it is all sold – every foot of it.

1 Indian Appropriation Bill, 1905, Hearing before the Subcommittee of the Committee on
 2 Indian Affairs of the Senate of the United States, 58th Cong. 3rd Sess. (1905) (Statement of 3 Sen. Charles W. Fulton).

4 35.

5 Congress thus clearly recognized – and further, admitted – that the defendant
 6 federal government, despite the absence of formal ratification, nonetheless acted as if the 7 treaties had been fully ratified and seized all of the Chinook's land under the terms of the 8 1851 treaties, sold that land, and never compensated the Chinook.

9 36.

10 Between January and June 1906, Dr. Charles E. McChesney, Supervisor of Indian
 11 Schools for the BIA, visited the Pacific Northwest to prepare an enrollment of Indians 12 pursuant to pending distribution of funds in land claims litigation before the Court of 13 Claims (now the Court of Federal Claims). The Indian Appropriation Act of 1906 (33 Stat.
 14 1073), passed in recognition of the 1851 Treaties, expressly authorized the Secretary of the 15 Interior to “investigate the number of ... Lower Band of Chinook Indians of Washington, and 16 Kathlamet band of Chinook Indians of the state of Oregon, or their heirs.” McChesney's 17 1906 report documented every member of the Chinook who was alive in 1851 and living in 18 1906, or those who were heirs of tribal members alive on the date of the 1851 treaties
 19 were signed. Of the total of 124 Chinook heirs identified in 1906 by Agent McChesney, 86%
 20 lived within or immediately adjacent to the aboriginal Chinook tribal homeland.

21 Allotment Act of March 4, 1911

22 37.

23 Another such Congressional Act is the Allotment Act of March 4, 1911. In that Act,
 24 Congress authorized Tribes, including the Chinook, whose lands had been taken from them
 25 by the federal government without compensation, to obtain allotments of land.

26 ///

38.

Shortly thereafter, the Chinook again sought permission from Congress to bring a compensation claim for their land, seeking an award that more accurately reflected the magnitude and fair value of land that had been taken from them by the federal government. Halbert v. United States, 283 U.S. 753 (1931), was centered around one primary question: Whether the Chinook Tribe was one of the unspecified “other Tribes of Indians in Washington who are affiliated with the Quinaielt and Quileute Tribes” under the Treaty of Olympia, as provided for in the Allotment Act of March 4, 1911? By answering that question in the affirmative, the Supreme Court in Halbert explicitly included the Chinook as a beneficiary under that 1911 Act, and concluded Chinook tribal members were entitled to take allotments of land on the Quinault Reservation. Of the three Tribes held entitled to allotments on the Quinault Reservation through the Halbert decision, the Chehalis and Cowlitz have since been federally recognized; again, only the Chinook have not.

39.

Between 1932 and 1934, the BIA issued hundreds of allotments to both adults and minors in the Chinook Indian Nation. Chinook allottees were not Quinaults and were not members of the Quinault Indian Nation, and many did not reside on the Quinault Reservation. Hundreds of these allotments remain in trust today and are administered by the BIA for members of the Chinook Indian Nation.

The Appropriations Act of 1912

40.

The Act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 518) was adopted by Congress expressly for the purpose of “making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the BIA, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for various other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and thirteen.” Id. at 518-550 (emphasis added). The 1912 Act appropriated money – in the exact amounts specified in the 1851 Tansey Point Treaties – for the Kathlamet Band of Chinook Indians of Oregon ($7,000), the Waukikum Band of Chinook Indians of Washington ($7,000), the Wheelappa Band of Chinook Indians of Washington ($5,000), and The Lower Band of Chinook Indians of Washington ($20,000), with the following caveat:

That said Indians shall accept said sum, or their respective portions thereof, in full satisfaction of all demands or claims against the United States for the lands described in the agreements or unratified treaties between the United States and said Indians....

Id. at 546 (emphasis added). This money was appropriated by Congress for the Chinook in order to reimburse them for the land seized from them by the federal government following the unratified Tansey Point treaties in 1851. This Act of Congress was highlighted by Assistant Secretary Gover as constituting constructive, statutory ratification of the 1851 treaties because it sought to fulfill the terms of those treaties through compensation for the land which had been seized.

The Western Washington Claims Act of February 12, 1925

41.

Pursuant to its reserved power to legislatively recognize or terminate Tribes, the 1925 Western Washington Claim Act expressly acknowledged the Chinook as a Tribe under its jurisdiction requiring:

that all claims of whatsoever nature, both legal and equitable, of all the tribes and bands of Indians [citing the treaties of 1855 and 1859] ... which the ... Chinooks ... may have against the United States shall be submitted to the Court of Claims, with right of appeal by either party to the Supreme Court of the United States for determination and adjudication.

U.S. Statutes at Large, 68th Cong., 2nd Sess., Ch. 214, 886-87.

42.

The Western Washington Claims Act of February 12, 1925 was perhaps the most consequential Congressional action for the Chinook, because, through it, Congress

1 authorized that "all claims of whatever nature, both legal and equitable" could be submitted
 2 to the Court of Claims (later the Indian Claims Commission), and the Act expressly
 3 acknowledged the Chinook as identified claimants. Ch. 214, H.R. 2694, 43 Stat. 886
 4 (Feb. 12, 1925). The Chinook's authorized claim ultimately became "Docket 234," and 5 resulted in a final determination that the Tribe had "aboriginal or Indian title to certain 6 lands lying in parts of the present states of Washington and Oregon," that had not been 7 properly compensated for by the 1912 Act. Ch 214, H.R. 2694, 43 Stat. 886. Thus, in the 8 1925 Act, Congress effectively declared that the Chinook were a Tribe with the standing to 9 make both legal and equitable claims against the United States government.

10 American Indian Policy Review Commission

11 43.

12 Creation of a special commission to effect a simple and modern codification of law
 13 relating to Indians was suggested in the 1928 Problem of Indian Administration, widely 14 known as the Meriam Report (Brookings Institution). The Problem of Indian Administration:
 15 Report of a Survey made at the request of Honorable Hubert Work, Secretary of the Interior,
 16 and submitted to him on February 21, 1928 (Baltimore, Md., The Johns Hopkins Press, 17 1928). The Meriam Report recognized that a large number of Tribes had outstanding 18 claims with the federal government, many dating back to treaties, and recommended 19 settling those claims "at the earliest possible date so that the Indians may know where they 20 stand and settle down to a reasonably well defined economic situation, free from the 21 uncertainties arising from the existence of material unsettled claims." Id. at 749. The 22 Meriam Report continued:

23 With these claims largely out of the way, it would seem practicable for a 24 specially appointed commission, after considerable arduous labor, to effect a 25 codification of law relating to Indians which will be at once reasonably simple and well adapted to modern conditions.

26 Id. at 749-750.

1 44.

2 The American Indian Policy Review Commission ("AIPRC") was established under
3 the 93rd Congress in order to conduct a thorough assessment of the policy and legal history
4 of federal government relations with Indian Tribes, and the ramifications of those relations.
5 United States Cong. Joint resolution to provide for the establishment of the American
6 Indian Policy Review Commission, 93rd Cong., S.J. Res. 133. 88 Stat. 1910 (1975). The 7 Commission was ultimately tasked with defining the federal government's trust
8 responsibility to Indian Tribes and making legislative recommendations in accordance with 9 that freshly defined responsibility. Id.

10 45.

11 The Commission made several findings and recommendations in its Final Report,
12 which it submitted to Congress May 17, 1977. United States Senate, American Indian Policy
13 Review Commission, Final Report, 95th Cong., 1st Sess., Vol 1. Among the Commission's 14 findings were the recognition that "unrecognized" Tribes are excluded from the protection
15 and privileges of the Federal-Indian relationship and the recommendation that the 16 recognition of all Tribes should be affirmed by a special office. Id. at 457, 461. The Chinook 17 are specifically identified on the Commission's list of "unrecognized" Tribes under the 18 states of both Oregon and Washington. The entry for the Chinook in Washington confirms 19 that the Chinook have both U.S. Treaty Rights and are mentioned in BIA records, reports, or 20 publications.

21 46.

22 Congress also legislates generally with respect to all Indian Tribes and individual 23 Indians, delegating the authority to federal administrative officials and agencies to 24 determine which Indian Tribes or individuals are to be served pursuant to such laws. In 25 conjunction with such delegated authority from Congress, the Secretary of the Department
26 of the Interior is authorized to determine, acknowledge, or recognize the existence of particular Indian Tribes. Formal federal acknowledgment qualifies Tribes for many programs designed to fulfill the federal government's trust responsibility to those Tribes. The authority of the DOI over such recognition or acknowledgment, however, derives entirely from statutes enacted by Congress, and is limited by, and to be guided by, that statutory grant or authority. No statute ever has been enacted by Congress that has given the DOI the power or authority to terminate a federal relationship with an Indian Tribe that has been recognized by Congress, either implicitly or expressly. Similarly, no statute has ever been enacted to give the defendants authority to prohibit a tribe once denied acknowledgment under its admittedly "broken" process from re-petitioning for acknowledgment or seeking reaffirmation of their tribal status based upon new or additional evidence.

47.

In 1934, Congress codified its treatment of Indian Tribes through the Indian Reorganization Act ("IRA"). To qualify for benefits under the IRA, Tribes must meet certain conditions set by federal law. The most important condition is federal recognition which is a "formal political act confirming the Tribe's existence as a distinct political society, and institutionalizing the government-to-government relationship between the Tribe and the federal government." California Valley Miwok Tribe v. U.S., 515 F.3d 1262, 1263 (D.C. Cir. 2008) (quoting Cohen's Handbook of Federal Indian Law, § 3.02(3) at 138 (2005 ed.)). The IRA "sought to strengthen tribal governments and restore the Indian land base." S. Rep. NL. 111-247 at 2 (2010) (internal quotations omitted).

48.

Section 19 of the IRA broadly defines "Indians" to describe those who are eligible to reorganize under the Act:

- (1) All persons of Indian descent who are members of any recognized Indian Tribe now under federal jurisdiction;

(2) All descendants of such members who were, on June 1, 1934, residing within the present boundaries of any Indian reservation; and

(3) Shall further include all other persons of ½ or more Indian blood.

25 U.S.C. § 479.

49.

Members of the Chinook satisfied one or more of those criteria at all times material to this lawsuit. This is particularly so, since the BIA's own interpretation of § 19 of the IRA reads:

Section 19 of the Act provides that ... a recognized tribe is one with which the government at one time or another has had a treaty or agreement or those for whom reservations or lands had been provided and over whom the government exercises supervision through an official representative.

BIA Branch of Acknowledgment and Research ("BAR") John Collier to Ben Shawanessee (Apr. 24, 1935).

50.

In 1978, the DOI promulgated Part 83 of its implementing regulations under the IRA, which set out a uniform procedure known as the "Federal Acknowledgment Process," through which Indian groups could seek federal recognition or acknowledgment. Part 83 "applies only to indigenous entities that are not federally recognized tribes." 25 C.F.R. § 83.3.

51.

There are two primary means of achieving federally acknowledged status under Part 83. A Tribe can be "recognized for the first time," which requires that a Tribe must produce evidence sufficient to satisfy seven criteria set forth in 25 C.F.R. § 83.7(a)-(g). Alternatively, a previously recognized Tribe "can be re-affirmed" pursuant to 25 C.F.R. § 83.12, whereby the petitioner would have to prove past recognition through treaties, acknowledgment of rights by the federal government, past allocation of land by the government, and satisfy two of the same criteria set forth in § 83.7.
///

FEDERAL RECOGNITION OF THE CHINOOK THROUGH EXECUTIVE OR ADMINISTRATIVE ACTION
Chinook Petition for Federal Acknowledgment

52.

In 1979, the Chinook gave formal notice of intent to seek federal recognition. They retained an attorney and a tribal historian to document their case, and over a 19-year period submitted twelve standard file boxes of materials containing 1,307 exhibits – 178 pounds of paper. During the next five years, the DOI's BIA required supplemental information that the Chinook combined in yet another filing in 1998. That additional material was later found unconsulted in a BIA employee's desk drawer.

53.

After Kevin Gover became Assistant Secretary – Indian Affairs in 1997, he determined that he could not rely on the Branch of Acknowledgment and Research, (“BAR”), which was charged with performing the technical review of recognition petitions. He authorized the retention of an outside consultant to independently review the work performed by the BAR to ensure regulatory compliance. The BAR recommended against recognition for the Chinook as it did then for almost all such petitions. Based on the outside consultant's review, however, Gover came to a contrary conclusion and a Final Determination was issued finally granting formal recognition to the Chinook Indian Nation in January 2001 (see Exhibit B attached).

54.

Specifically, Assistant Secretary Gover found the 1911 and 1912 Congressional Acts to be significant expressions of federal recognition of the Chinook as a Tribe, but singled out the Western Washington Claim Act of 1925 as the most important of the three

Summary Under the Criteria and Evidence for Final Determination For Federal Acknowledgment of the Chinook Indian Tribe/Chinook Nation at 52, 79.

55.

56.

Newly-appointed Assistant Secretary – Indian Affairs Neal McCaleb was persuaded that his predecessor was mistaken about the Chinook’s tribal history. The BAR conducted no additional investigation or research before Assistant Secretary McCaleb issued a brief

1 opinion claiming the Chinook failed to prove they had continued to exist and be governed
 2 as a Tribe during the first decades of the 20th Century – despite voluminous evidence to the 3 contrary, including supplementary materials that were cached by one of his employees,
 4 perhaps deliberately to prevent their consideration and despite the fact that other Tribes
 5 were found to have shown adequate evidence of continued existence during those same
 6 decades with similar or even less evidence.<sup>3</sup>

7 57.

8 When the Chinook Petition for Acknowledgment was ultimately denied on 9 reconsideration in 2002 (see Exhibit C attached), the BIA found that the Chinook satisfied
 10 four of the seven criteria set forth in 25 C.F.R. § 83.7:

- 11 1. Section 83.7(d), which required that the Chinook Indian Nation provide a copy of 12 its governing document, a constitution ratified by its members;
- 13 2. Section 83.7(e), which required that the Chinook provide a list of all known 14 current members and all available former membership lists, membership of 15 individuals having been established using evidence acceptable to the Secretary
 16 demonstrating descendancy from a historical Tribe or Tribes;
- 17 3. Section 83.7(f), which required that the tribal membership be comprised 18 principally of persons who are not members of any acknowledged North 19 American Indian Tribe; and
- 20 4. Section 83.7(g), which required the absence of evidence that the Chinook were 21 the subject of congressional legislation expressly forbidding or terminating the 22 federal relationship.

23 ///

24 ///

25 _____
 26 <sup>3</sup> Many other Tribes who were granted recognition had no records of consistent government before the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, whereas the Chinook adopted their first constitution in 1925 and had been actively pursuing land claims and litigation since 1899.

58.

The BAR under the new presidential administration ultimately found that the Chinook did not meet the following three criteria:

1. Section 83.7(a) - the "Indian Entity" criteria - which required the Chinook Indian Nation to have been identified as an American Indian entity continually since its last acknowledgment;
2. Section 83.7(b) - the "Distinct Community" criteria - which required that a "predominant portion" of the group must exist as a distinct community; and
3. Section 83.7(c) - the "Political Authority" criteria - which required that a petitioner must maintain political influence and authority over its members. The BIA found that the Chinook failed to meet this criterion because there was insufficient evidence of the governing body on a continual basis since 1851. The BIA initially found that the Chinook satisfied this criterion, but later concluded that it did not - a determination which was based on subjective rather than objective criteria. By comparison, the Cowlitz Indian Tribe also petitioned for recognition under Part 83, and the BIA granted its petition and recognized it an Indian Tribe despite the fact that the evidence submitted by the Chinook was at least as strong, if not stronger, than that submitted by the Cowlitz.

59.

The Reconsidered Final Determination by new Assistant Secretary McCaleb omitted significant evidentiary and documentary material and analysis included in the Final Determination made by Assistant Secretary Gover, and also applied a much more stringent and demanding standard to establish the Chinook Indian Nation's continuity with the historic Chinook Tribe than had been used with respect to other Tribes who were successful in seeking federal recognition.

///

1 60.

2 No evidentiary hearing was held at any time in the Chinook's recognition
3 determination process, although the result of the process controls access by tribal 4 members to fundamental services. The Tribe was not provided an opportunity to 5 cross-examine witnesses, and decision-makers did not allow live testimony, and therefore 6 were not able to determine the credibility of the anthropologists, historians, or other
7 professionals, many of whom held differing opinions concerning whether the Tribe did, or 8 did not, meet the established criteria. No impartial decision-maker had the opportunity to 9 evaluate Assistant Secretary McCaleb's Reconsidered Final Determination.

10 61.

11 Further complicating their effort to obtain federal acknowledgment, on February 11,
12 2000, the Assistant Secretary of the Interior – Indian Affairs ("AS-IA") issued a directive, 65
13 Fed. Reg. 7052 (Feb. 11, 2000), that significantly changed the acknowledgment process,
14 including greatly reducing the Branch of Acknowledgment and Research's ("BAR") active 15 research and analysis in connection with its evaluation of tribal petitions.

16 62.

17 Because the period for supplementing the record had passed, the Chinook were not 18 allowed to supplement their petition to respond to the changed role of the BAR staff.

19 63.

20 Prior to the issuance of this new directive, and for other cases, the BAR staff made 21 field visits, conducted interviews, and engaged in independent research and analysis to 22 evaluate and provide technical assistance "to ensure that the petitioner presents the 23 strongest case possible and is not turned down for technical reasons." Bureau of Indian 24 Affairs, Branch of Acknowledgment and Research, Official Guidelines of the Federal 25 Acknowledgment Regulations, 12-13 (1997).

26 ///

1 64.

2 The staff used those visits to gain greater understanding of the petition and
3 community than might be readily available from the documents submitted.

4 65.

5 Until the February 11, 2000 directive, the Chinook had every reason to believe the 6 BAR would continue its existing practice and that BAR was interested in seeking all 7 information and developing all possible analyses relevant to the proper determination of 8 its Tribal status.

9 66.

10 Changing the evaluation greatly increased the burden on the Chinook Indian Nation, 11 which could no longer expect researchers to apply the broadest range of their expertise to 12 assist the Tribe to receive the most favorable possible consideration. Had the Tribe known 13 that the BAR would not function as research professionals, it would have made efforts to 14 introduce increased evidence. This dramatic change in BAR practice was made without 15 notice and comment under the APA, and it violated the APA, 5 U.S.C. § 553.

16 67.

17 This directive was partially revoked on March 31, 2005, 70 Fed. Reg. 16,513
18 (Mar. 31, 2005). By that time, however, it was too late to benefit the Chinook, whose 19 petition had already been ultimately denied.

20 68.

21 During its final consideration of the Tribe's petition, BAR made no field visits and 22 conducted no interviews of tribal members, unlike the assistance extended to other Tribes.
23 Further, in accordance with the Assistant Secretary's directive, BAR did not conduct any 24 independent research and analysis to support the Tribe's petition in the course of 25 considering the Chinook Petition for Acknowledgment and ultimately issuing its 26 Reconsidered Final Determination denying recognition to the Tribe.

69.

Reeling from McCaleb's arbitrary reversal, and with limited funds to further appeal, the Chinook Indian Nation ultimately abandoned its recognition efforts with the DOI. Former Congresswoman Elizabeth Furse, a champion of tribal recognition efforts, and tribal attorney Michael Mason, told them that they could expect Congressional restoration of their federal status within four to six months. The Tribe relied upon that advice and opted to forego further appeals and instead pursue legislative action. That legislation, sponsored in 2008 and again in 2009 by Congressman Brian Baird, would have extended federal acknowledgement to the Chinook, including eligibility for all benefits and services provided by the federal government to federally recognized tribes, allowing for ceremonial fishing and hunting in designated areas, and the ability to have land taken into trust for the Tribe. Congressional efforts to restore Chinook tribal sovereignty, however, went for naught, as Rep. Baird's bills never made it to a vote. As of July 31, 2015, the BIA's new regulations now prohibit a tribe that has been denied recognition from reapplying (25 C.F.R. 83.4(d)).

70.

In 2004, former Assistant Secretary Gover testified before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs regarding S. 297, a bill which would provide reforms and resources to the BIA in order to improve the federal recognition process for Tribes. Sen. Hrg. 108-534. In his prepared statement, Assistant Secretary Gover testified:

I remain convinced that the Chinook Tribe is deserving of Federal recognition, and I believe that, if Assistant Secretary McCaleb had the resources provided in this bill available to him when he addressed the Chinook petition, the outcome well may have been different.

Sen. Hrg. 108-534 at 72.

///

///

71.

Scholars analyzing the BIA tribal acknowledgment process during this era have concluded:

Prior to the George W. Bush administration, Indian nations petitioning for acknowledgment could expect about a 50 percent chance of success. Between 2001 and 2009, however, the process ended favorably for only two of fifteen petitioners. Federal acknowledgment policy has become an entrenched bureaucratic tool for denying legitimate Indian nations sovereignty that is rightfully theirs.

Recognition, Sovereignty Struggles, & Indigenous Rights in the United States, p. 280, Den Ouden and O'Brien (U. N. Carolina Press, 2013).

FEDERAL RECOGNITION OF THE CHINOOK THROUGH COURSE OF DEALING Bureau of Indian Affairs

72.

We are fully aware that the Chinooks are an Indian Tribe, and it is unfortunate that no treaties were ever executed with them. However, you are familiar with the circumstances, undoubtedly, surrounding the [1855 Chehalis River] treaty negotiations, and it was not at that time assumed that any serious consequences could arise in the future years because of the failure to enter into this treaty.

Letter from Melvin L. Robertson, Superintendent of the Bureau of Indian Affairs Western Washington Agency, Everett, Washington (October 13, 1954).

73.

The BIA, created in 1824 as the Office of Indian Affairs under the then-Department of War, has a more prolific history of governmental interaction with the Chinook Indian Nation than any other branch or bureau of the federal government. That relationship began in 1851, when Superintendent of Indian Affairs for the Oregon Territory Anson Dart was sent by Congress to negotiate treaties with Tribes of the Oregon Territory, including the Chinook, and that relationship continues to this day. Throughout that more than 150 years

1 of history, the BIA has taken and held land in trust for Chinook Indian Nation members,
 2 managed and distributed judgment funds, authorized fishing and negotiated fishing
 3 contracts, supervised loans and attorney contracts, administered allotments, enrolled
 4 Chinook Tribal members in BIA schools, and admitted Chinook Tribal members to BIA
 5 hospitals. That lengthy course of dealing between the BIA and the Chinook establishes that 6 the BIA has long-recognized the federal status of the Chinook Indian Nation.

7 74.

8 Typical actions of the BIA fulfilling fiduciary duties associated with its trust
 9 responsibility include holding land in trust, supervision of attorney contracts, supervision 10 of loans, management and distribution of judgment funds, and issuing, administering, and 11 maintaining allotments. These are all actions the BIA has performed for the Chinook Indian 12 Nation, demonstrating the BIA's fiduciary responsibility to Chinook Indian Nation.

13 75.

14 The General Allotment Act (24 Stat. 388) limited public domain allotments to 15 Indians maintaining tribal relations with a recognized Tribe. Yet, two public domain
 16 allotments secured by members of the Chinook Indian Nation in 1890 were subsequently 17 taken into trust by the BIA. A third public domain allotment was secured by an unnamed
 18 member of the Chinook Indian Nation in 1895. Numerous parcels of land in historically 19 Chinook territory were, and in some cases still are, held in trust for Chinook tribal 20 members.

21 BIA-Distributed 1912 Judgment Funds

22 76.

23 The BIA maintained detailed records of the per capita payments made in the first
 24 land claims case of the Chinook Indian Nation. These funds were appropriated by Congress 25 on August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 518-35) and were paid out by the BIA the beginning in 26 November 1914. The BIA maintained notes on each entitled tribal member and recorded the number of the check, date of payment, and other information relevant to heirship of deceased beneficiaries. The associated Annuity Payment Roll of 1914, in which Congress commissioned the BIA to identify and list all Chinook tribal members who were eligible for payment under the 1912 judgment, is still used as tribal enrollment criteria under the Chinook Constitution (see Exhibit A attached). The BIA again conducted a census among tribes in Washington from 1916 to 1919, this time dispatching special allotting agent Charles E. Roeblin to document tribal members in Washington state not recorded on the 1906 McChesney Roll. The Roeblin Roll, which was reported to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on January 31, 1919, includes many Chinook tribal members and is also still used as criteria for establishing enrollment eligibility by the Chinook Indian Nation (see Exhibit A attached).

BIA-Supervised Attorney Contracts

77.

For many decades, Congress required approval of the Secretary of Interior for all attorney contracts of Tribes to pursue federal claims. 25 U.S.C. § 70(n). The Chinook hired their first attorney for a claim against the federal government in 1899. In 1925, W.B. Sams, Superintendent of the Taholah Indian School, approved the Chinook attorney contract with Arthur E. Griffin. This contract was entered into to pursue the Tribe's Docket 234 lawsuit in the Court of Claims through the jurisdictional act P.L. 402. From 1951 to 1954 attorney contracts were signed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and BIA Superintendent, and an additional attorney contract was declined. In the 1960s, the BIA supervised the Chinook's attorney hired to handle its Docket 234 case.

Indian Reorganization Act Consultation

78.

The Indian Reorganization Act of 1934 ("IRA") was passed as part of a larger attempt by the federal government to encourage in part tribal economic development and

1 self-determination. Cohen's Handbook of Federal Indian Law, § 1.05, at 81 (2012 ed.). The 2 IRA ended allotment of Indian land and encouraged Tribes to develop tribal governments,
 3 including the adoption of formal constitutions. Id. at 82. Under the Indian Reorganization
 4 Act, the term "Indian Tribe" means "any Indian or Alaska Native Tribe, band, nation, pueblo,
 5 village or community that the Secretary of the Interior acknowledges to exist as an Indian 6 Tribe." 25 U.S.C. § 5130(2).

7 79.

8 In October 1934, the BIA cited the binding solicitor's opinion that non-resident
 9 Indian voters could cast ballots under elections held pursuant to the IRA. The Chinook, 10 possessing a post-treaty affiliation on the Quinault Reservation as determined in the 11 Halbert decision, were accordingly determined by the BIA to also possess the right to vote
 12 in the Quinault referendum under the IRA. The BIA subsequently enrolled members of the 13 Chinook Indian Nation as voters to cast ballots on the question of organization of the 14 Quinault Reservation pursuant to the IRA. The Chinook voted overwhelmingly in favor of 15 confederating with the Quinault and other Tribes, but that confederation was never carried 16 out. Further, in 1953, the BIA received and held the governing documents of the Chinook,
 17 including their constitution and bylaws, as provided for under the Indian Reorganization
 18 Act.

19 Termination Act Consultation

20 80.

21 As the Termination program grew in the 1950s, the BIA sought to involve the 22 Chinook Indian Nation in that process. BIA Superintendent wrote the Chinook Chairman
 23 Grant Elliott in March 1952, inviting him to attend a meeting with the Quinault Tribe and 24 Quinault allottees in order to set up a Planning Committee to work out a program for the 25 disposition of the Quinault Tribe and Tribal Reservation. In June of that year, BIA officials
 26 visited western Washington to assess prospects of termination, during which time they met

1 with the Chinook and other Tribes. The Chinook were invited to and participated in
 2 additional meetings and consultations held in September 1953, October 1953,
 3 November 1953, and November 1954 regarding the proposed termination. Most 4 significantly, two of those meetings, on October 3 and October 25, were held in the 5 historical Chinook village of Bay Center, Washington, where the Chinook are 6 headquartered today.

7 BIA-Supervised Loans

8 81.

9 In 1965, the BIA Portland Area Office supervised Contract No. 14-20-0500-2430
 10 between the United States and Chinook Indian Nation. The Chinook sought the loan
 11 pursuant to the Act of November 4, 1963 (77 Stat. 301), which established a revolving fund
 12 from which the Secretary of the Interior could make loans to finance assistance for Tribes
 13 in cases before the Indian Claims Commission. The purpose of the BIA-supervised loan to 14 the Chinook was to facilitate the study of timber values and fisheries on the lands found in 15 tribal ownership by the Indian Claims Commission in Docket 234.

16 BIA-Managed Indian Claims Commission Judgment Funds

17 82.

18 When the Indian Claims Commission rendered its ruling in the matter of Docket 234
 19 on November 4, 1970, it awarded $48,692.02 to the Chinook for the confiscation of 20 76,630 acres of land in Oregon and Washington that was historically occupied by the 21 various bands of the Chinook and that the Chinook agreed to cede to the federal 22 government in signing the 1851 Treaties. Following an appeal of the decision, the court
 23 entered its final order for the award on December 3, 1971. Within four days, the Chief of 24 the Tribal Claims Section of the Division of Tribal Operations at the BIA notified the Area
 25 Director about the resolution of Docket 234. The BIA then worked until 1984 to determine 26 the method by which the judgment funds would be disposed, ultimately proposing a draft

1 bill that would direct the judgment funds to be utilized for tribal education purposes
 2 developed and implemented by the Secretary of the Interior. Those funds now sit
 3 untouched by and held in trust for the Chinook Indian Nation by the BIA.

4 Inconsistency and Unreliability in Other BIA Actions

5 83.

6 A "Tribe" for the purpose of establishing eligibility for BIA programs "means any 7 Indian Tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community ... which is recognized
 8 as eligible for the special programs and services provided by the United States to Indians
 9 because of their status as Indians." 25 U.S.C. § 1903(8). It would seem that the Chinook
 10 Indian Nation, if it is an "unrecognized Tribe," should not then qualify for the assistance of 11 the United States through programs like the Indian Health Service (25 U.S.C. § 1603(14)), 12 probate jurisdiction (25 C.F.R. § 15.2), and economic development assistance (25 U.S.C.
 13 § 1452(c)). And yet, the Chinook have received all of those benefits, albeit inconsistently at 14 times, and in fact continue to receive many such benefits, all despite the fact the Chinook do
 15 not appear on the BIA's list of federally recognized Tribes pursuant to 25 U.S.C. § 5129.

16 Boarding Schools

17 84.

18 The federal policy of removing Indian children from their home and Tribe and 19 relocating them to government-run boarding schools was a hallmark of the Assimilation 20 Era of United States Indian policy. Captain Richard H. Pratt's infamous mantra of "Kill the 21 Indian, save the man," was applied to children taken from Tribes from across the United 22 States, and the Chinook were no exception. Participation in the boarding schools – most 23 prominently for the Chinook, at the Chemawa Indian School near Salem, Oregon –
 24 continued in many instances well into the 20th century.

25 ///

26 ///

85.

The BIA over many decades enrolled Chinook children (often forcibly) in BIA boarding schools, including the Cushman Trades School, Tulalip Indian School, Haskell Institute in Kansas, and the Chemawa Indian School. Children voluntarily applying to BIA schools later in the 20th century had to submit a required "Application for Admission to Non-Reservation School and Test of Eligibility." Chinook children were admitted as eligible based on citizenship in the Chinook Indian Nation. Further, upon acceptance to a BIA school in several instances BIA arranged for transportation of Chinook children to those schools. Today, at least one Chinook youth is currently enrolled at the Chemawa Indian School.

Healthcare

86.

In establishing the Indian Health Service ("IHS"), Congress found that "[f]ederal health services to maintain and improve the health of the Indians are consonant with and required by the Federal Government's historical and unique relationship with, and resulting responsibility to, the American Indian people." 25 U.S.C. § 1601(1). Congress further declared "that it is the policy of this Nation, in fulfillment of its special trust responsibilities and legal obligations to Indians ... to ensure the highest possible health status for Indians and urban Indians and to provide all resources necessary to effect that policy." 25 U.S.C. § 1602(1). IHS provides care directly to members of federally recognized Indian Tribes and Alaska Native villages. 25 U.S.C. § 1603(13). IHS defines eligible individuals as persons who are of Indian descent and are members of their Indian community. 42 C.F.R. § 136.12(a)(1).

87.

The Chinook have historically and continuously been admitted to and treated at BIA hospitals. In its Petition for Acknowledgement, the Chinook Indian Nation documents several of its tribal members who were treated at the Cushman Indian Hospital in Tacoma, Washington beginning in 1938 and who were admitted because of their status as members of the Chinook Indian Nation. More recently, Chinook births have been documented at the Cushman Indian Hospital, and Chinook tribal members have been born as late as the 1990s while receiving IHS funding as Chinook residents of Pacific County, Washington.

Probate

88.

The Secretary of the Interior has original probate jurisdiction over trust and restricted Indian property, including exclusive authority to determine heirs and to approve wills for such property. 25 U.S.C. §§ 372, 373; 25 C.F.R. § 15.10. The BIA continues to not only correspond with the Chinook about pending Indian probate matters but consults with the Chinook Indian Nation governmental office to verify enrollment eligibility and request Birth Certificates and Certificates of Indian Blood (CIB) for individuals involved in Indian probate matters. Further, the DOI Office of Hearings and Appeals has held Indian probate hearings in the Chinook tribal office.

Financial Management and Administration

89.

The American Indian Trust Fund Management Reform Act of 1994 ("AITFMRA") was passed in recognition of the trust responsibility existing between the federal government and Indian Tribes as explicitly including the Secretary of the Interior's responsibility to account for the daily and annual balance of all funds held in trust for Indian Tribes and individual Indians. 25 U.S.C. § 4011(a). The AITFMRA defines "Indian Tribe" as "any Indian Tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community ... which is recognized as eligible for the special programs and services provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians." 25 U.S.C. § 4401(2). The AITFMRA further created an Office of Special Trustee for American Indians to prepare and administer the trust reform

1 plan. 25 U.S.C. §§ 4042, 4043. That Office of Special Trustee for American Indians has,
 2 under the current presidential administration, corresponded directly with the Chinook
 3 Indian Nation In addition, many Chinook tribal members have Individual Indian Money
 4 (IIM) accounts that are administered by the DOI.

5 Economic Development Support

6 90.

7 The BIA standard for assisting Tribes with economic development provides that a 8 Tribe is eligible if it has been "recognized by the Federal Government as eligible for 9 services from the Bureau of Indian Affairs." 25 U.S.C. § 1452. The BIA funded an economic 10 development report for the Chinook Indian Nation by Professor Brown from the University
 11 of Washington, entitled "Feasibility of a Charter Boat Operation for the Chinook Indian 12 Tribe of Washington in Ilwaco, Washington." The Chinook then applied in 1978 for funds 13 for a Records Clerk, Tribal Planner, Researcher, and Housing Foreman under the 14 Comprehensive Employment and Training Act. They received $27,490.46 for the period 15 from January through September 1979. In January 1982, the Chinook received a grant for 16 $15,600 from the Small Tribes Organization of Western Washington for maintenance of 17 tribal offices and improvement of tribal operations.

18 National Park Service

19 91.

20 The National Park Service has a history of consulting with the Chinook Indian 21 Nation on issues ranging from establishment of national monuments and parks, including 22 the establishment of Fort Clatsop, a project which brought the Chinook back to the fort in 23 which they aided Corps of Discovery through the harsh winter of 1805, to environmental 24 recovery projects such as the Colewort Creek Salmon Recovery Project, which the 25 Superintendent of the National Parks Service request initiation of government-to-26 government consultation for habitat restoration along the Netul River in Oregon.

92.

Fort Clatsop was established by Meriwether Lewis and William Clark as part of the Corps of Discovery during December 1805. The Corps of Discovery wintered at Fort Clatsop from December 7, 1805 until March 23, 1806, visiting and trading with the Chinook almost daily. In his journal, Meriwether Lewis chronicled several interactions with the Chinook, including the following on February 20, 1806:

This forenoon we were visited by "Ta-cum," a principal chief of the Chinnoks [sic] and 25 men of his nation ... he came on a friendly visit. We gave himself and party something to eat and supplied them plentifully with smoke. We gave this chief a small medal with which he seemed much gratified. In the evening at sunset we desired them to depart as is our custom and closed our gates.

The Journals of Lewis and Clark (Lewis, Meriwether and Clark, William).

93.

The National Park Service also consults with the Tribe on projects including repatriation of remains under the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act.

Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act

94.

For the purpose of establishing eligibility under the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act ("NAGPRA"), the term "Indian Tribe" "means any Tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community of Indians ... which is recognized as eligible for the special programs provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians." 25 U.S.C. § 3001(7). Rather than strictly providing for consultation with Tribes appearing on the BIA's list of federally recognized Tribes, the regulations broaden somewhat the standard definition of federal recognition for purposes of NAGPRA by accepting recognition by a federal agency, not just by the BIA. 43 C.F.R. § 10.2; see 60 Fed. Reg. 62,134-62,136 (1995).

///

95.

This operating definition includes the Chinook, who are regularly consulted with under NAGPRA by the National Park Service and other federal agencies. The Chinook, in fact, appear on the cover of the National Park Service's booklet regarding Consultation with Native Americans: A Historic Preservation Responsibility, where they are shown performing a traditional post-raising ceremony at Cathlapotle in the Ridgefield National Wildlife Refuge in 2003. NAGPRA consultations regularly include other federal agencies, including the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the Army Corps of Engineers, the Environmental Protection Agency, the Department of Energy, and the list goes on. The Chinook are the only unrecognized Tribe regularly consulted on particular projects, appearing alongside formally recognized Northwest Tribes such as the Confederated Tribes of the Grand Ronde, the Chehalis Confederated Tribes, the Cowlitz Indian Tribe, the Quinault Indian Nation, and the Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe, to name a few.

96.

Other recent consultations between the National Park Service and Chinook Indian Nation include Station Camp – Middle Village Park in Washington, where other, federally recognized Tribes such as the Confederated Tribes of the Grand Ronde and the Shoalwater Bay Indian Tribe deferred to the Chinook for interpretation of an uncovered Chinookan town site. The Chinook worked directly with the National Park Service to provide that interpretation, and Chinook tribal members were paid by the National Park Service to stay with uncovered remains around the clock until they could be repatriated.

97.

Other executive agencies, including the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the U.S. Forest Service, are also documented as consulting on an ongoing basis with the Chinook Indian Nation regarding the repatriation of cultural and human remains found in their traditional territories.

United States Fish and Wildlife Service

98.

Located within the current boundaries of the Ridgefield National Wildlife Refuge is the Cathlapotle Plankhouse, which the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service ("FWS") partnered with the Chinook Indian Nation to construct. FWS continues to partner with the Chinook to offer an accurate representation of Chinook culture at the site. Also within the Refuge boundaries is the site of the former Chinookan town of Cathlapotle, which was encountered by Lewis and Clark on their expedition and later excavated and written about by Professor Kenneth Ames.

99.

In February 2017, FWS wrote to the Chinook Indian Nation regarding a proposed visitor access infrastructure at Ridgefield National Wildlife Refuge. FWS cited its responsibilities under § 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act and 36 C.F.R. § 800 as initiating consultation with the Chinook pursuant to 36 C.F.R §§ 800.2, 800.4(a)(3), and 800.4(a)(4). The Chinook have been consulted on other ground disturbing activities and shoreline management plans in the area as well, and have been included in decision making processes.

United States Navy

100.

In addition to agencies under the DOI, the United States Navy consults with the Chinook on an ongoing basis. In April 2017, e.g., the Department of the Navy wrote to the Chinook Indian Nation to "initiate Section 106 consultation" in accordance with 36 C.F.R. § 800, on a proposed undertaking involving small-unit land and maritime training activities for naval special operations personnel along the southwest Washington coast. 36 CFR § 800 regulates the protection of historic properties, and defines "Indian Tribe," in accordance with § 4 of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25

U.S.C. § 5304(e)), elaborating that “for purposes of this rule, Indian tribe includes federally recognized Indian tribes and Alaska Native Corporations.” 36 C.F.R. § 230.2 (emphasis added). By initiating § 106 consultation with the Chinook, the Department of the Navy has demonstrated its explicit recognition of the Chinook Indian Nation as a Tribe.

BIA Recognition Standards Interpreted and Applied Unequally

101.

As set forth above, the BIA was long charged with maintaining a list of federally recognized Tribes, but until 1994 when Congress mandated standards, it was never clear how Tribes were added or subtracted from the roster. A BIA clerk testified in 1995 that records of the Agency comments had been lost, so her “revised list was generally consulted to determine groups’ legal status, although paradoxically she conceded that she had no authority to make such decisions.” Administrative Law Judge Findings in Samish recognition petition, August 31, 1995. ALJ David L. Torbett heard testimony for eight days and then issued a 44-page opinion in which he found that the BIA could not adequately explain why the Samish Tribe in Washington’s Puget Sound had been excluded from a list of federally recognized Tribes (ALJ Findings 1-3; Final Determination at 16, 38-9). He noted that upon “further questioning Ms. Simmons [BIA clerk] conceded that she had no personal knowledge of the legal status of the groups she had listed under the Portland Area....”

102.

The inconsistent and unequal standards for obtaining federal acknowledgment set by the BAR have been similarly problematic. What constitutes unambiguous prior federal acknowledgment for one tribe is found not do so for another, based on largely similar – if not identical – facts. In the 1980 Jamestown Clallam Proposed Finding for Federal Acknowledgment, the BAR cited a “solicitor’s opinion” concluding that the Jamestown Clallam tribe was a federally recognized tribe, based in part on its inclusion in “1925 claims litigation,” in order to establish unambiguous prior federal acknowledgment of the tribe. Recommendation and summary of evidence for proposed finding for Federal acknowledgment of the Jamestown Band of Clallam Indians of Washington, Anthropological Report at 3. The BAR’s Proposed Finding then suggested that the Jamestown Clallam’s inclusion in 1925 claims legislation amounted to “denomination as a tribe by Act of Congress.” Id. The Chinook were given no such consideration, despite being identified by name in the Western Washington Claims Act of 1925. Such inclusion, under the standards applied by the BAR to the Jamestown Clallam, should have been considered as unambiguous prior federal acknowledgment of the Chinook.

103.

The respective histories of the Chinook and the neighboring Cowlitz Indian Tribe have also followed nearly identical trajectories, so it is no surprise that their acknowledgment petitions were submitted and evaluated almost simultaneously. Their histories are so intertwined that they even hired the same expert, Stephen Dow Beckham, and lawyer, Dennis J. Whittlesey, to assist in documenting their histories and preparing their petitions, the revised versions of which were each filed with the Office of Federal Acknowledgment in 1987. Unfortunately for the Chinook, that is largely where their histories diverge.

104.

On February 12, 1997, the BAR, under Assistant Secretary Ada Deer, released the Summary under the Criteria and Evidence for Proposed Finding Cowlitz Tribe of Indians. As a preliminary matter, the BAR determined that:

The Cowlitz present at the (1855 Chehalis River Treaty) negotiations, specifically the Lower Cowlitz band, had refused to sign the proposed treaty, but the Federal Government’s willingness to negotiate with them constituted previous recognition....

///

1 Reconsidered Final Determination to Acknowledge that the Cowlitz Indian Tribe Exists as 2 an Indian Tribe, at 17 (summarizing the findings of the Proposed Finding).

3 105.

4 Such a determination substantially reduces the burden required of a petitioning
5 Tribe by eliminating several acknowledgment criteria altogether. BAR then evaluated the 6 Cowlitz petition according to its determination of this unambiguous prior federal 7 acknowledgment, ultimately finding in favor of federal acknowledgment.

8 106.

9 On August 11, 1997, the BAR under Assistant Secretary Deer released the Summary
10 under the Criteria and Evidence for Proposed Finding Against Federal Acknowledgment of 11 the Chinook Indian Tribe, Inc. (emphasis added). Despite the fact that the Chinook were 12 party to the same 1855 Chehalis River Treaty negotiations that were used to establish 13 unambiguous prior federal acknowledgment of the Cowlitz, the Chinook were found not to 14 have been subject to such prior acknowledgement. There is no explanation in the Proposed 15 Finding for why the Chinook were not unambiguously acknowledged by virtue of their 16 participation in the Chehalis River Treaty negotiation with the Cowlitz in 1855, or further,
17 why the signed treaties which the Chinook had negotiated with the federal government
18 through Anson Dart in 1851 did not establish unambiguous federal acknowledgment twice 19 over:

20 Because the 1851 treaties were not ratified by the United States Senate, the 21 Federal Government again engaged in treaty negotiations with 22 representatives of the "Lower Chinook" in 1855.... Although these 23 negotiations did not result in a signed treaty, Federal negotiators once again had accepted that a sovereign Chinook political entity existed with which it could negotiate a treaty.

24 Summary under the Criteria and Evidence for Proposed Finding Against Federal 25 Acknowledgement of the Chinook Indian Tribe, Inc. at 26.

26 ///

107.

Under the standard set forth by the BAR in reviewing the Cowlitz Petition for Acknowledgment, this should have been sufficient for a finding of unambiguous prior federal acknowledgement. Of course, it was not, and ultimately the Chinook were determined by the BAR as having failed to establish federal acknowledgment.

108.

This inconsistent approach by the BAR violates the Equal Protection component within the Due Process Clause of the 5th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, as well as the Administrative Procedures Act (5 U.S.C. § 500, et. seq.), because it constitutes actions by an agency that are arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, and not in accordance with the law. Both prohibit agencies from treating similarly-situated petitioners differently without providing sufficiently reasoned justification for that disparate treatment. In fact, irrational and unjustified disparate treatment perfectly describes the BAR's approach to evaluating the Cowlitz and Chinook's respective petitions for federal acknowledgment. For example, where the BAR found Chinook evidence insufficient to meet the criteria, when evaluating the Cowlitz, the BAR explained:

The paucity of descriptions of the full entity is considered to be a consequence of the historically dispersed residential pattern of the groups in the Cowlitz River valley.

Summary Under the Criteria and Evidence for Proposed Finding Cowlitz Tribe of Indians at 19.

109.

As demonstrated in their petition, the Chinook historically exhibited the same residential patterns, yet the BAR found it to be insufficient information for finding in favor of federal acknowledgement.

///

///

110.

Additionally, participation in BIA schools and other programs was used by the BAR to demonstrate Cowlitz's historical and continuing existence:

Chemawa Indian school and Puyallup Agency land records referred to the Cowlitz Indians, as did Yakima allotment records between 1898 and 1914. Cushman Indian school correspondence in 1911 referred to...members of the Cowlitz Tribe eligible for allotment at Quinault, and recommended that they be enrolled and allotted there.

Summary Under the Criteria and Evidence for Proposed Finding Cowlitz Tribe of Indians at 17.

111.

Yet, that same criterion was insufficient for the Chinook to demonstrate their historical and continuing existence:

Some Chinook descendants attended the Government's Indian schools, but they did so because of their degree of Indian ancestry, not because the Indian Office recognized a Chinook tribe.

Summary under the Criteria and Evidence for Proposed Finding Against Federal Acknowledgment of the Chinook Indian Tribe, Inc. at 6.

112.

The BAR under Assistant Secretary Deer essentially made the determination that the Chinook were unable to show external identification of their Tribe from 1855, the time of the Stevens treaty negotiations, as well as show that the Tribe was a political entity in the early part of the twentieth century. Again, despite nearly identical histories, the BAR made an entirely contrary assessment of the Cowlitz, the Snoqualmie and other Tribes.

113.

Assistant Secretary McCaleb, Assistant Secretary Gover's successor under the George W. Bush Administration, reversed the Final Determination for Federal Acknowledgment of the Chinook Indian Tribe/Chinook Nation on July 5, 2002, by ruling that Assistant Secretary Gover's determination had been inconsistent with the

1 acknowledgment regulations' standard for demonstrating unambiguous previous federal
 2 acknowledgment. In contrast, Assistant Secretary McCaleb's Reconsidered Final
 3 Determination for the Cowlitz Indian Tribe, released six months earlier on December 31, 4 2001, affirmed the proposed finding of unambiguous prior federal acknowledgment under 5 largely similar facts.

6 114.

7 The government's mere willingness to negotiate a treaty with the Cowlitz was 8 determined by the Office of Federal Acknowledgment to constitute unambiguous prior 9 acknowledgment, a finding which ultimately led to a successful conclusion of the Cowlitz's
 10 Petition for Acknowledgment. The Chinook – who participated in that same treaty
 11 negotiation as well as another that resulted in multiple, signed treaties – were determined
 12 not to have been subject to unambiguous prior federal acknowledgment. The cruel irony,
 13 of course, is that the Cowlitz and the Chinook, neighboring tribes with nearly identical
 14 histories, walked out of the same treaty negotiation with Governor Stevens in 1855. Today,
 15 after concurrently participating in the same administrative recognition process utilizing 16 the same expert historian, one Tribe is federally recognized because of that history and the 17 other is not.

18 Samish Tribe Recognition Litigation
 19 Greene v. Babbitt*, 943 F. Supp. 1278 (W.D. Wash 1996)

20 115.

21 The federal judge presiding over the Samish tribe's litigation noted in a published
 22 opinion that the Samish people's "long journey for recognition has been made more 23 difficult by excessive delays and governmental misconduct." Id. at 1281. In 1996, the 24 Samish Indian Nation sued the DOI, seeking reinstatement of findings that were made in its 25 favor by an Administrative Law Judge considering recognition matters. In the course of 26 those proceedings, it was discovered that a longstanding opponent of Samish recognition.

1 DOI attorney, Scott Keep, obstructed the processing of the Samish application and 2 deliberately wrote his own counter-findings which he then presented ex parte to the 3 decision-maker. United States District Judge Thomas S. Zilly (appointed by President
 4 Reagan in 1988 and now a senior judge) publicly reprimanded Keep, citing him for 5 contempt.

6 Mr. Keep, obviously unfazed by statements of disapproval from this Court
 7 and the Ninth Circuit, and with apparent disregard for both statutory and 8 traditional standards of fair play, met directly with the ultimate decisionmaker and urged her to deny federal recognition to the Samish.<sup>4</sup>

9 Id. at 1286.

10 116.

11 The Court ruled that a remand to the BIA would “cause further delay and expense
 12 while subjecting the [Tribe] to a substantial risk of suffering the same procedural violations
 13 that they have now endured twice over the past ten years.” Id. at 1288. Judge Zilly further 14 found:

15 ...when agency delays or violations of procedural requirements are so 16 extreme that the court has no confidence in the agency’s ability to decide the 17 matter expeditiously and fairly, it is not obligated to remand. Rather than 18 subjecting the party challenging the agency action to further abuse, it may put an end to the matter by using its equitable powers to fashion an appropriate remedy.

19 Id.

20 117.

21 The Samish had to return to Court in 2011 to recover compensation for the time
 22 during which the Tribe should have been recognized and receiving federal benefits, but 23 was not. Samish Indian Nation v. United States, 657 F.3d 1330 (Fed. Cir. 2011).

24 ///

25
 26 <sup>4</sup> As of the date of filing of this Complaint, Mr. Keep remains a Senior Solicitor for the Department of the Interior.

1 Little Shell Tribe of Chippewa Indians

2 118.

3 In Montana, the Little Shell Tribe of Chippewa Indians was buffeted by virtually 4 identical bias from the BIA concerning its quest for recognition. The Tribe's bid for 5 recognition was thwarted initially by the same BIA bureaucracy, but their denial was 6 overturned by BIA head Kevin Gover. The Little Shell was officially recognized in the 7 waning days of the Clinton Administration, but, just as with the recognition of the Chinook,
 8 Gover's decision was then reversed by his successor. The Little Shell, too, turned 9 unsuccessfully to Congress after losing confidence in the BIA's ability to fulfill its trust
 10 responsibility. Then-Congressman Ryan Zinke of Montana (now Secretary of Interior and a 11 named Defendant in the instant case) sponsored the Little Shell's recognition bill.

12 Delaware Tribe

13 119.

14 It is an established fact that the BIA has acted inconsistently and unpredictably in a 15 non-transparent way since the adoption of its regulatory Tribal recognition process. See,
 16 e.g., Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma v. Norton, 241 F. Supp. 2d 1368 (N.D. Okla. 2002), rev'd on 17 other grounds, 389 F.3d 1074 (10th Cir. 2004). In that case, the Delaware Tribe (an East 18 Coast Tribe), was forced to combine with Cherokees in Kansas after the so-called "Trail of 19 Tears." The Delaware had signed a treaty with the United States in 1867 (just as the 20 Chinook did in 1851), but it was granted a final decision by the BIA under which the BIA
 21 agreed to "reconsider and retract" its Part 83 denial of acknowledgment and grant federal 22 recognition to the Delaware without forcing the tribe to go through another Part 83
 23 process on the grounds that its treaty was conclusive evidence of its federal 24 acknowledgment. Id. at 1370.

25 ///

26 ///

120.

While the Tenth Circuit ultimately reversed the grant of recognition on an unrelated ground (the Supreme Court had previously ruled that the text of the Delaware Tribe Treaty actually made their group a part of the Cherokee Tribe and it was not sovereign), the decision left undisturbed the BIA's conclusion that barring other disqualifiers like the explicit text of the Delaware Treaty, the existence of a federal treaty alone satisfied the criteria established by Part 83 and was unambiguous, conclusive evidence of federal recognition of a Tribe. There is no comparable disqualifying language in the Tansey Point Treaties of 1851 or in the 1855 Treaty of Olympia. They should be considered conclusive evidence of their federal recognition as a tribe.

121.

Also, significantly, during the almost 40 years since the time that the Chinook first petitioned the BIA for recognition, virtually all other Pacific Northwest Tribes have been recognized or restored in a variety of ways to the point that presently, the Chinook are among the very few historic Tribes in the Northwest that have not had their tribal status acknowledged, despite the fact that they, historically, were "the most powerful nation on the entire Pacific Coast." Anson Dart, 1851, quoted in Clifford E. Trafzer, The Chinook (New York: Chelsea House, 1990), 87.

2015 AMENDMENTS TO PART 83

122.

Just two years ago, the BIA itself admitted that the acknowledgment process it applied in the years leading up denial of the Chinook's Part 83 petition in 2002 was "broken," "non-transparent," "inconsistent," and "unpredictable." 80 Fed. Reg. 37,862-863 (July 1, 2015):

To summarize ... the [Part 83 federal acknowledgment] process is slow, expensive, inefficient, burdensome, intrusive, non-transparent, inconsistent, and unpredictable.

Hearing on the federal acknowledgment process before the H.S. Comm'n. on Indian, Insular, and Alaskan Native Affairs, 114th Cong. 2 (Apr. 22, 2015) (testimony of Asst. Secretary – Indian Affairs Kevin Washburn).

123.

The preamble to the proposed 2015 rule changes stated that the purpose for the changes to the recognition process was to promote “fairness and consistent implementation, and increasing timeliness and efficiency, while maintaining the integrity and substantive rigor of the process.” Id. at 37,862.

124.

The 2015 amendments had been under consideration within the BIA since 2009 in an attempt to improve the process that had recognized only 17 petitions and denied 34 other petitions since 1978. Id. Assistant Secretary Washburn’s testimony set forth four guiding principles for amending the Part 83 process:

1. Transparency;
2. Timeliness;
3. Efficiency; and
4. Flexibility.

125.

The need for flexibility emphasized that the amended Part 83 process should understand the “unique history of each tribal community and avoid the rigid application of standards that do not account for the unique histories of tribal communities.” Id. at 4.

126.

Under the Part 83 procedure that the Chinook underwent, as other courts have recognized:

a federal acknowledgment petition can be over 100,000 pages long and cost over $5,000,000 to assemble; the BIA estimated time for completion of review is 30 years.

1 See Mackinac Tribe v. Jewell, 829 F.3d 754, 758 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (citing The Incomplete Loom: Exploring the Checkered Past and Present of American Indian Sovereignty, supra at 497).

3 127.

4 In fact, the BIA itself admitted that “72% of ... currently recognized federal Tribes
5 could not successfully go through the [federal acknowledgment] process as it is being 6 administered today.” Id. at 507 (quoting Rev. John Norwood, Delegates Report, the National 7 Congress of American Indians Annual Conference 1 (2010)).

8 128.

9 The 2015 amendments differ from the process in place when the Chinook’s petition
10 was considered in several important ways. First, based on “inconsistent and unpredictable
11 criteria, the amended process promotes a consistent baseline,” meaning “if a particular 12 amount of evidence or a particular methodology was sufficient to satisfy a criterion in a 13 decision made in 1980, 1990, or 2000, that baseline threshold remains the same for 14 petitioners today.” Information Fact Sheet: Highlights of the Final Federal Acknowledgment 15 Rule (25 C.F.R. § 83, BIA, June 29, 2015<sup>5</sup>. This would mean that if the Chinook were to 16 petition for acknowledgment or reaffirmation today, the BIA would be required to consider
17 that the Cowlitz Indian Nation in 2002, the Snoqualmie Tribe, and the Jamestown S’Klallam
18 Tribe, satisfied the federal recognition process because of their treaty relationships with 19 the United States, and to accord the same significance to the Chinook for their treaty
20 relationships and grant them recognition.

21 129.

22 Second, but critically for the Chinook, the amended Part 83 prohibits any Tribe from 23 re-petitioning for federal acknowledgment under Part 83 if it previously had applied for 24 that process and its petition was denied. 25 C.F.R. § 83.4(d). As amended, that section 25 provides:

26 <sup>5</sup> Available at <https://www/bia.gov/es/groups/public/documents/text/idc1-030769.pdf>.

1 The Department will not acknowledge ...

2 * * * *

3 (d) An entity that previously petitioned and was denied Federal 4 acknowledgment under these regulations or under previous regulations in part 83 of this title....

5 130.

6 During consideration of the amended Part 83 process, the DOI considered a
7 proposal that would allow "limited re-petitioning." Opponents of "limited re-petitioning," 8 including the Quinault, argued that re-petitioning was "unnecessary, inefficient, and unfair 9 to other tribes," and contended that re-petitioning "could result in acknowledgment of 10 previously denied petitioners." 80 Fed. Reg. 37,874. Exactly so.

11 131.

12 Those in the DOI who strongly objected to the ban on re-petitioning did so on the 13 ground that such a prohibition would treat petitioners, like the Chinook, unequally; that it
14 would violate Equal Protection and Due Process components of the Fifth Amendment; that 15 it would "prevent getting to the truth of whether a Tribe should be acknowledged;" that it
16 exceeds the BIA's authority; is "politically motivated;" is "based on an invalid justification"
17 (established equities); and fails to consider the petitioners' interest. Id. at 37,874-75.

18 132.

19 The Chinook submitted comments on the proposed changes and provided those 20 comments to the BIA's Office of Regulatory Affairs & Collaborative Action. The Chinook
21 saw the opportunity to have its status reaffirmed as a Tribe under the new rules.

22 133.

23 Nonetheless, instead of allowing Tribes that had devoted decades of their lives and 24 enormous sums of money seeking recognition only to find themselves victimized by that 25 broken, inconsistent, and unpredictable process, to have an avenue for eventual 26 recognition, the BIA did just the opposite in the 2015 regulations by forever barring those

1 victims (such as the Chinook) from reapplying, shirking all responsibility for their plight
 2 and leaving any remedy for redress to the political process: "Congress may take legislative 3 action of recognized groups it finds have merit even though they do not meet the specific 4 requirements of the acknowledgment regulations." Id.<sup>6</sup>

5 134.

6 The BIA's decision adopting the Final Rule prohibiting re-petitioning adversely
 7 affected the Chinook by depriving it of the right to supplement or revise a petition for 8 recognition or to file a new petition pursuant to the reaffirmation process.

9 135.

10 That regulatory prohibition of re-petitioning is arbitrary, capricious, and an abuse of 11 discretion, especially when it is evident that the entire purpose behind the new rules was 12 to address the unfairness, inconsistency, and unpredictability of the previous system that 13 resulted in recognition of the Cowlitz, and Jamestown S'Klallam, for example, on factual
 14 grounds virtually identical to those of the Chinook and which resulted in a contrary 15 decision.

16 136.

17 This is especially damaging to the Chinook because the Tribe can demonstrate 18 satisfaction of the BIA's reaffirmation criteria if allowed to re-petition. Indeed, the Chinook 19 can satisfy the recognition criteria as well, if they are to be considered, interpreted, and 20 applied in the same manner as they were applied to those Tribes who were approved, such 21 as the Cowlitz.

22 DOCKET 234

23 137.

24 The Indian Claims Commission Act of 1946 required federal officials to make 25 threshold determinations of tribal status before a group could assert a claim against the 26

---

<sup>6</sup> Interestingly, Assistant Secretary Washburn informed the Chinook in a telephone conference in July 2015

1 United States under the Act. According to the Solicitor's Opinion from 1948, claimants
2 under the Act must be:

3 a group whose political existence has been recognized by Congress or the 4 Executive Branch of the Government, or one which in the absence of such 5 recognition has a de facto collective existence and carries on a type of group life characteristic of ... Indians.

6 Op. Sol. Interior, M-35029 (Mar. 17, 1948). Following the service of many of its members in 7 World War II and the creation of the Indian Claims Commission ("ICC"), the Chinook Tribal 8 Council dedicated itself to amending its constitution, first created in 1925.

9 138.

10 In 1951, the Chinook gained congressional approval to file a case before the Indian 11 Claims Commission for fairer federal compensation assessing the misappropriation of its 12 lands by the federal government following the Chinook's entry into the 1851 Tansey Point
13 Treaty. (Dkt. 234, Ind. Cl. Comm. 56). The Chinook ultimately prevailed in that litigation
14 almost 20 years later in 1970 and were awarded $48,692.02, in addition to the $26,307.95
15 that had been awarded by Act of Congress in 1912. That amount was determined based on 16 76,630 acres of ceded territory, plus timber rights (fisheries were not considered). Those 17 funds were put into trust for the Chinook to be administered by the BIA.

18 139.

19 There is no indication that Congress intended for payment of those funds, or for any 20 claims for uncompensated land, to be made to individual tribal members. Rather, in 21 Duwamish Tribe of Indians v. United States, 79 Ct. Cl. 530, the Court of Claims found it hard 22 to believe that money was intended to be paid to individuals:

23 The Government was securing a cession of lands improved by the individual
24 efforts and industry of the Indians, and, in addition to the value thereof free 25 from improvements, the clear intention of the parties was to fix a value upon all substantial ones and increase the compensation to the tribe accordingly....

26 (continued)

that the Tribe could still reapply, but would have to go to "the back of the line."

1 The dwellings housed the members of the tribe and the treaty dealt with the 2 tribe as such, and in the absence of more positive provisions to the contrary, we think the claims are tribal.

3 79 Ct. Cl. 530 at 575-576. Further, the Indian or aboriginal title held by the Chinook over
 4 their lands was held collectively, not individually. The simple existence of a favorable
 5 judgment before the Indian Claims Commission therefore demonstrates federal recognition
 6 of the Chinook for the simple facts that a threshold determination of recognized political 7 existence was made by Congress when it allowed the Chinook to move forward with their 8 claim, and subsequently when the Chinook were treated as having collective rights in the 9 resulting judgment.

10 140.

11 As its trustee, the BIA has a fiduciary responsibility to the Chinook. The BIA is 12 further charged by Congress with safekeeping and appropriate investment of these funds 13 that were awarded to the Chinook without strings attached. As a fiduciary, its conduct is 14 “judged by the most exacting fiduciary standards,” which dictates that it must act with good
 15 faith in the best interests of the beneficiary at all times. United States v. Mason, 412 U.S. 391
 16 (1978); see also Seminole Nation v. United States, 316 U.S. 286, 296 (1942). This money is 17 not part of “protections, services and benefits” that the BIA provides to recognized Tribes.
 18 It is money that the ICC concluded the Chinook were entitled to recover in return for the 19 “lands aboriginally used and occupied by the Clatsop Tribe and The Lower Band of Chinook
 20 Indians” and “taken from them without their consent as of 1851.” ICC Findings 31 (Apr. 16, 21 1958). Those funds are held in trust pursuant to 25 U.S.C. § 1401(b).

22 141.

23 Of necessity, the ICC Decision entailed de facto acknowledgment of the Chinook as a 24 federally-recognized Tribe. As a matter of fact, the Commission found that the Chinook 25 Indian Nation’s Lower Columbia Band and Clatsop Tribe were the legal successors to the 26 1851 treaty signatories. In no uncertain terms, it stated: “[T]he defendant assumed definite

1 control over the areas of land exclusively used and occupied by said [Tribes] ...
2 disregarding the aboriginal rights of said Indians.”

3 142.

4 After appeal, the U.S. Court of Claims entered its final order for the award in 5 December 1971. Within four days, the Chief of the Tribal Claims Section of the Division of 6 Tribal Operations at the BIA officially notified the Area Director of the resolution of 7 Docket 234. The BIA then dithered for over 13 years to determine the method for 8 disposition of the judgment funds. Finally, the BIA proposed that the monies be redirected
9 to the budget of a BIA administered program in trust for the Chinook.

10 143.

11 For almost 50 years, the BIA dutifully sent monthly statements regarding the Tribe’s
12 Docket 234 funds to its current mailing address. The Tribal Secretary filed these away, first 13 at the tribal office in Chinook, WA until 2008, then at their tribal offices in Bay Center, 14 Washington, after they relocated there. The monthly statements included the accrual of 15 investment gains. When last available (Feb. 29, 2012), the Chinook account showed a 16 balance of $497,374.02. Even given modest returns, the total is easily now over $500,000.

17 144.

18 Abruptly in 2015, without explanation, those statements stopped being received by 19 the Chinook Indian Nation from the BIA. When newly-elected Chinook Tribal Chair Tony 20 Johnson investigated the BIA’s actions, he did not learn why until late August 2015 when he 21 received the following response from a senior official in the Office of the Special Trustee, in 22 a letter dated August 25, 2015:

23 As you are aware, the Chinook Tribe is not Federally recognized.
24 Section 25.83.2 of the Code of Federal Regulations, provides that 25 “Acknowledgement of tribal existence by the Department [BIA] is a pre-26 requisite to the protection, services and benefits of the federal government available to Indian tribes by virtue of their status as tribes.” Thus, because you are not recognized, the funds held with our office cannot benefit your tribe. The only suggestion that I can make to you is that you continue to pursue recognition in accordance with the regulations set forth under CFR Section 25, Part 25.

See Exhibit D attached. The Office of the Special Trustee has since corresponded directly with the Chinook Indian Nation on other matters.

145.

In sum, because the DOI no longer deemed the Chinook to be a recognized Tribe, they were not entitled to an accounting or possession of their own money – money which was awarded to the Chinook (first by Congress in 1912 and then additional compensation by the ICC in 1970) after extensive proceedings and upon 66 detailed findings recounted in a valid court order. Moreover, the BIA’s “suggestion” that the Chinook pursue recognition under its regulations is completely hollow, since the tribe is prohibited from doing so by those same regulations. In any other context, this would be an indictable defalcation. In the current situation, it is what the AIPRC earlier labeled a “Catch 22” where the BIA absolves itself of its fiduciary responsibility by refusing to acknowledge tribal status – many years after the fact.

146.

In desperation, but still hopeful, the Tribe turned to the newly-elected President Obama. The Chinook began an intensive, but unsuccessful, letter-writing campaign seeking an Executive Order restoring the Tribe.

147.

The Tribe then decided to appeal to the court of public opinion, and, together with the Duwamish Tribe, their plight was featured in an award-winning documentary, Promised Land, depicting both Tribes’ protracted fight against federal indifference. (See attached disc.)

///

///

148.

Almost 40 years after they began the recognition process, over 200 years after Lewis and Clark landed on their shores (and almost 120 years after hiring their first lawyer), and surviving strategies designed to eliminate their very existence, the Chinook have come full circle. They seek simple justice by petitioning this court to affirm what was internationally recognized at the time of first contact: The Chinook are a respected and legitimate Indian Tribe with a long and proud history, entitled to formal acknowledgment as such by our federal government.

FIRST CLAIM FOR RELIEF

• Declaration of Federal Recognition •

149.

Plaintiffs reallege and incorporate herein by reference the allegations contained in ¶¶ 1-148 above.

150.

The Constitution vests Congress with plenary authority over Indian affairs. See, e.g., the Federally Recognized Indian Tribe List Act of 1994, Pub. L. 103-454, § 103(1), 108 Stat. 4791 (1994) (codified at 25 U.S.C. § 5130, et seq. – Congressional Findings).

151.

Federal acknowledgment requires that the Secretary of Interior place a Tribe on a regularly updated list of recognized Tribes which are eligible for programs and services provided by the United States. See 25 U.S.C. § 1531.

152.

Congress set forth three separate means for a Tribe to achieve federal recognition in the 1994 Act:

Indian Tribes presently may be recognized by Act of Congress; by the administrative procedures set forth at Part 83 of the Code of Federal Regulations denominated "Procedures for Establishing that an American

1 Indian Group Exists as an Indian Tribe;" or by the decision of a United States
2 court.

3 Pub. L. 103-454, § 103(3).

4 153.

5 The Chinook have diligently fought for their rights through Congress and through 6 the Part 83 procedure. However, the failure of the Congress to adopt legislation, and the 7 unlawful and arbitrary and capricious decisions of the BIA, have served to foreclose the 8 Chinook's opportunities for recognition and/or reaffirmation by non-judicial means.

9 154.

10 The Chinook have not been congressionally terminated. The Secretary of the 11 Interior's failure to acknowledge the Chinook and include the Chinook on the list of 12 federally-recognized Tribes pursuant to 25 U.S.C. § 1531 violates the Fifth Amendment to 13 the Constitution and the APA as set forth herein, it violates Congressional policy to assist 14 Indian tribes and it perpetuates more than a century of historical injustice to the Chinook.

15 155.

16 A principle that "has long dominated the government's dealings with Indians ... [is] 17 the undisputed existence of a general trust relationship between the United States and the 18 Indian people." United States v. Mitchell, 463 U.S. 206, 255 (1983). The historic and 19 ongoing relationship between the federal government and the Chinook Indian Nation, as 20 set forth above, demonstrates the full trust relationship that exists between the federal 21 government and Chinook Indian Nation. Actions on the part of the Defendants, the 22 Executive Branch and Congress, as alleged herein, demonstrate that the federal 23 government has recognized the Chinook as an Indian Tribe; it has de facto acknowledged
24 the Chinook Indian Nation as a Tribe and has constructively ratified the 1851 Tansy Point
25 Treaty with The Lower Band of Chinook, to which the Plaintiff is a successor-in-interest, 26 and the 1855 Chehalis River Treaty (Treaty of Olympia), the negotiation of which the

1 Chinook participated in. Recognition of the Chinook has also been demonstrated by 2 Congress, by Executive Orders, by a long course of dealing, and by satisfaction of all the 3 elements necessary for common law recognition.

4 156.

5 Plaintiffs therefore seek a declaration from this court that the Chinook is federally
6 recognized tribe for all of the reasons set forth herein. Further, this Court has the power
7 and authority to order that the Chinook be placed on the Federally Recognized Indian Tribe
8 List based upon their recognition through treaties, Executive Order, Congressional action , 9 federal common law and based upon the lengthy, detailed history of dealings with the 10 federal government since at least 1851, as set forth above, and Plaintiffs respectfully
11 request that this Court enjoin the Defendants to do so.

12 157.

13 The Chinook Indian Nation further seeks an injunction ordering the BIA to provide 14 benefits accorded to federally recognized Tribes in all areas, specifically including, but not 15 limited to: (1) administration of trust accounts; (2) land allotments and the ability to take
16 land into trust for community benefit, including drug and alcohol treatment; (3) probate
17 under the terms of reform legislation; (4) access to health care through IHS; (5) educational 18 benefits available to eligible tribal members through federal scholarship programs; (6)
19 rights to inventories and consultations mandated by the Native American Graves
20 Protection and Repatriation Act and other federal legislation and regulations protecting 21 cultural resources; (7) standing in Indian Child Welfare Act determinations and 22 placements; (8) recognition of fishing, hunting and gathering rights afforded by treaty and 23 subsequent adjudication since 1851; (9) access to federally managed lands under the 24 provisions of the American Indian Religious Freedom Act; (10) opportunities to qualify for 25 federal grants programs for economic development and other purposes; (11) access to 26 ///

1 federal housing assistance and housing funds available from HUD and other Departments;
 2 and (12) maintenance of Individual Money Market accounts.

3 158.

4 The Chinook Indian Nation also respectfully requests, pursuant to 5 Fed.R.Civ.P. 53(a)(1)(c), that the Court appoint a Special Master versed in federal Indian
 6 law to expedite this process, oversee it, and facilitate negotiations with the BIA over 7 specific items listed above. After decades of struggle and maintaining their identity against 8 all odds, the Chinook deserve an able, impartial enforcer to oversee implementation of the 9 Court's decisions in this matter.

10 SECOND CLAIM FOR RELIEF

11 • Violation of the Administrative Procedures Act •

12 159.

13 Plaintiffs reallege and incorporate herein by reference the allegations contained in 14 ¶¶ 1-158 above.

15 160.

16 The APA grants a right of judicial review to "[a] person suffering legal wrong
 17 because of agency action, or adversely affected or aggrieved by agency action...." 5 U.S.C.
 18 § 702. "Final agency action for which there is no other adequate remedy in a court [is] 19 subject to judicial review." Id. at § 704.

20 161.

21 Under the APA, a court must "hold unlawful and set aside agency action ... found to 22 be ... arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with 23 law...." Id. at § 706(2)(A).

24 162.

25 25 C.F.R. § 83, amended in 2015 and effective July 31, 2015, unlawfully prohibits the 26 Chinook from obtaining a fair review of its status as a sovereign Indian Tribe under the

1 revised criteria where it was previously denied such status after acknowledgment and
 2 under a procedure that the BIA has admitted was “broken,” “inconsistent,”
 3 “non-transparent,” and “unpredictable,” a system effectively designed to deny federal
 4 recognition. The Tribe has a legal right to bring this challenge under the revised Part 83
 5 regulation, even though it has not filed a new petition with the BIA since doing so, in light of 6 the ban on re-petitioning, would have been futile and resulted in certain denial.

7 163.

8 In fact, the Chinook have exhausted their administrative remedies. See Safari Club
 9 Int’l. v. Jewell, 832 F.3d 1280 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (futility is an exception to the requirement of 10 exhausting administrative remedies); accord, Honig v. Doe, 484 U.S. 305, 327 (1988) 11 (futility may occur when agency administrative processes cannot provide the relief sought 12 by the petitioner).

13 164.

14 Congress did not grant the BIA an express delegation of authority to prohibit Tribes
 15 from re-petitioning under 25 C.F.R. § 83, and the BIA has not been given implicit legislative 16 delegation to do so because such a ban is manifestly contrary to the purpose of the federal 17 acknowledgment process. See 25 C.F.R. §§ 83.2 (purpose) and 83.3 (scope). Defendants
 18 have violated the APA by adopting rules that are not in accordance with the law by failing
 19 to act pursuant to Congressionally-delegated authority in amending the Part 83 rules, 20 codified at 25 C.F.R. § 83.4(d), to prohibit the BIA from considering a new petition for 21 acknowledgment by a previously-denied Tribe under the prior, “broken” and “inconsistent”
 22 Part 83 process.

23 165.

24 The scope of the BIA’s acknowledgment process under Part 83 applies only to 25 indigenous entities (like the Chinook) that are not federally-recognized Indian Tribes. 25
 26 C.F.R. § 83.3. Consequently, Part 83 only applies to a small number of unrecognized Tribes

1 in the United States, and yet the BIA chose to restrict that small number of
2 non-federally-recognized Tribes to a single effort to obtain the rights that their members
3 are entitled to – federal acknowledgment and recognition – regardless of the substantive 4 merits of their claim for recognition and regardless of the BIA’s admission that the 5 Chinook’s Petition was effectively doomed by its own prior “broken” and “inconsistent”
6 process and regardless of that fact that the 1978 regulations under which the Chinook
7 petitioned for federal acknowledgement contained no prohibition on re-application.

8 166.

9 A federal agency cannot act unlawfully, or arbitrarily and capriciously or abuse its 10 discretion to prohibit petitions for redress to vindicate a regulated entity’s statutory rights
11 based on its own administrative convenience and efficiency concerns and without statutory 12 authority to do so. Congress did not authorize or intend that the BIA be allowed to delay
13 final action on a petition for more than 20 years, change the rules regarding recognition 14 and acknowledgment during that more than 20-year process to limit evidence and 15 procedural protections and allow third party objections and then grant formal 16 acknowledgment to the Tribe only to have a third-party request reconsideration at the 17 eleventh hour and then have that acknowledgment ripped away after 18 months.
18 Especially when the BIA, applying the same criteria, approved other Tribes’ petitions for 19 recognition under similar, indeed virtually identical facts. Compounding its unlawful 20 behavior, the BIA relying upon its own track record of administering a “broken,”
21 “inconsistent,” and “unpredictable” process, then adopted new rules that forever foreclose
22 the ability of a Tribe victimized by that process, such as the Chinook, to re-petition for 23 recognition or reaffirmation with more evidence and/or under different criteria.

24 167.

25 The 2015 amendments of Part 83 that became effective July 31, 2015, eliminate any 26 possibility that the BIA could consider new information or supplemental facts for

1 reaffirmation as opposed to one for recognition. As a result, it is unlawful because it was 2 done without Congressional authority and is therefore ultra vires. It allows the BIA to 3 ignore unrecognized Tribes' petitions for recognition or reaffirmation without any 4 authority to do so from its governing statutes.

5 168.

6 The BIA's refusal to consider new evidence or a new Petition from the Chinook after 7 the Tribe had its initial Petition denied under an admittedly broken and unfair process
8 violates the APA because it is erroneous, arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, and 9 not in accordance with the law within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 706.

10 169.

11 The Chinook Indian Nation and its members have suffered substantial injury as a 12 result of the Defendants' actions, including interference with aboriginal and treaty rights to 13 fish, hunt, and gather in their aboriginal territory, and the right to have lands and monies
14 held in trust by the United States.

15 170.

16 The Chinook Indian Nation and its members are adversely affected and aggrieved by 17 the action of the Defendants in prohibiting them from re-applying for acknowledgement or 18 reaffirmation of their tribal status, in that it deprives them of rights and benefits accorded 19 to federally-recognized Tribes and their members and deprives them of their ability to 20 maintain and support their distinct tribal and cultural identity. Plaintiffs therefore seek a 21 declaration from this court that the regulatory prohibition on re-application for 22 acknowledgement or application for reaffirmation contained in 25 C.F.R. § 83.4(d), as it
23 applies to the Chinook, violates the APA.

24 ///

25 ///

26 ///

THIRD CLAIM FOR RELIEF

• Violation of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment •

171.

Plaintiffs reallege and incorporate herein by reference the allegations contained in ¶¶ 1-170 above.

172.

Defendants' adoption of 25 C.F.R. § 83.4(d) which prohibits the Chinook from re-petitioning for recognition or reaffirmation of their tribal status under Part 83 violates the procedural due process component of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment.

173.

In 1975, Congress passed the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, and again reiterated the federal policy concerning the United States' relationship with Indian Tribes:

The Congress declares its commitment to the maintenance of the Federal Government's unique and continuing relationship with, and responsibility to, individual Indian tribes.... In accordance with this policy, the United States is committed to supporting and assisting Indian tribes in the development of strong and stable tribal governments, capable of administering quality programs and developing the economies of their respective communities.

25 U.S.C. § 5302 (Congressional declaration of policy).

174.

This longstanding Congressional policy of "assisting Indian Tribes" to develop independent communities has been undermined and eroded by the BIA's action in 2015 to ban re-petitioning for tribal recognition or reaffirmation. By prohibiting the Chinook's ability to show that it is entitled to recognition and/or reaffirmation, despite the fact that the Tribe is able to demonstrate that it fairly satisfies the criteria for recognition and/or reaffirmation, Defendants have violated the Plaintiffs' right guaranteed under the U.S. Constitution to due process petition the government for redress of grievances.

175.

Given the federal government's underlying policy of "assisting Tribes," and the government's recognition of the Chinook on multiple occasions beginning in 1851, the Chinook should be given an opportunity to petition, for the first time, under the "reaffirmation" process of 25 C.F.R. § 83.12. The Chinook can demonstrate their ability to satisfy all of the reaffirmation criteria.

176.

Subsequent to the denial of the Chinook's petition for recognition in 2002, it became evident that the Defendants were applying the criteria for approval of petitions for recognition in a biased, arbitrary, capricious, inconsistent, and unlawful manner. The Chinook should be allowed to reapply or have their petition for recognition or reaffirmation considered in a fair and objective manner under the recognition process set forth in 25 C.F.R. § 83.7.

177.

The Chinook have therefore been substantially prejudiced, adversely affected and aggrieved by the BIA's prohibition on re-petitioning, particularly where the regulatory scheme under which the Chinook first petitioned for federal acknowledgement contained no such prohibition on re-application and where the BIA has subsequently acknowledged that the process under which the Chinook's petition for recognition was ultimately denied was the product of a "broken," "inconsistent," "non-transparent," and "unpredictable" process

178.

The Chinook therefore seek a declaration from this court that the Defendants' action in adopting such a regulatory prohibition on re-application for acknowledgment or reaffirmation, as it applies to the Chinook, violates the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment.

FOURTH CLAIM FOR RELIEF

• Violation of the Equal Protection Clause of the Fifth Amendment •

179.

Plaintiffs reallege and incorporate herein by reference the allegations contained in ¶¶ 1-178 above.

180.

The Chinook are part of a group of Tribes that may deserve federal recognition under the provisions of Part 83, but are foreclosed or prohibited from re-petitioning for recognition or petitioning for reaffirmation as a Tribe simply because the Tribe exercised its statutory right to apply for recognition prior to the 2015 amendments and was initially acknowledged and then, on reconsideration, denied under a flawed process which the Defendants have acknowledged was “broken,” “inconsistent,” and “unpredictable.”

181.

The Chinook are similarly-situated to current tribal petitioners whose applications are being reviewed by the BIA under the 2015 amendments. The Chinook, however, are absolutely prohibited from being considered for recognition under this revision procedure without regard to their rights under the IRA or to the merits of their petition for federal recognition or reaffirmation.

182.

The Chinook also belong to a class of similarly-situated Pacific Northwest Tribes which have historically existed for millennia, and who either entered into treaties that were not formally ratified by the Congress, or who were invited by the federal government to participate in treaty negotiations and then refused to sign, but who nonetheless had their lands seized from them by the federal government. Yet the other members of the class have been subsequently federally recognized by the DOI or by Acts of Congress.

///

183.

The Chinook have therefore been denied equal protection of the laws under the Fifth Amendment because the BIA now has imposed a threshold prohibition on the Chinook again seeking federal acknowledgment under the Part 83 process when similarly-situated Pacific Northwest Tribes, such as the Cowlitz, either have been accepted and federally recognized under Part 83, or whose petitions for acknowledgement will be considered under the newly-approved and less stringent criteria.

184.

Furthermore, the BIA's ban on re-petitioning creates a situation where the Chinook would be able to succeed in obtaining federal acknowledgement or reaffirmation under the current Part 83 process because of the required application of a "consistent baseline," i.e., the same standards be applied to all similarly-situated Tribes petitioning the BIA for recognition. The Chinook therefore are being subjected to an unreasonable, inconsistent, rigid, biased, non-transparent, and subjective analysis that failed to apply the same "consistent baseline" to it as was applied to other tribal petitioners who participated in the same 1855 Treaty negotiations, and/ or who had monies appropriated by Congress for them to compensate them for the values of their seized lands, all of whom have now been successfully recognized, in violation of the Equal Protection component of the Fifth Amendment.

185.

Plaintiffs therefore seek a declaration from this court that the actions of the Defendants as set forth above constitute a violation of the Equal Protection component of the Fifth Amendment.

///

///

///

FIFTH CLAIM FOR RELIEF

• Petition Clause of the First Amendment Challenge •

186.

Plaintiffs reallege and incorporate herein by reference the allegations contained in ¶¶ 1-185 above.

187.

The First Amendment to the Constitution protects “the right of the people ... to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.” Borough of Duryea, Pa. v. The Guarnieri, 564 U.S. 379, 382 (2011). The Petition Clause of the Constitution protects a citizen’s right of access to mechanisms for their redress of grievances.

188.

By prohibiting the Plaintiff as a once-denied petitioner for recognition from applying for reaffirmation of its Tribal status for a first time, or seeking to reapply for acknowledgment, Defendants have effectively foreclosed the ability of the Chinook to seek redress or to grieve its federal recognition status. Defendants have therefore violated the Petition Clause of the First Amendment. Plaintiffs therefore seek a declaration from this court that the actions of the Defendants constitute a violation of the Petition Clause of the First Amendment.

SIXTH CLAIM FOR RELIEF

• Violation of APA •

189.

Plaintiffs reallege and incorporate herein by reference the allegations contained in ¶¶ 1-188 above.

190.

The federal government has already concluded that the Chinook had aboriginal or Indian title over the lands taken from them:

1 Upon the findings of fact this day filed herein and hereby made a part of this
 2 order, the Commission concludes as a matter of law, that ... the Chinook
 3 (proper) Indians [Lower Band of Chinook] had Indian title to the lands
 4 described ... and that the defendant [United States of America] assumed
 5 definite control over the lands of the Chinook (proper) tribe as of August 9, 1851, that said Indian tribal groups have the capacity and the right to assert claims for their respective lands....

6 6 Ind. C. Comm. 176a (1958). The federal government has further determined that those 7 lands were and are deserving of compensation:

8 [T]he lands of the Chinook Indians were taken as of the dates of the 9 unratified treaties at which time "the defendant assumed definite control over the areas of land... disregarding the aboriginal rights of said Indians."

10 21 Ind. C. Comm. 143, 151 (1969), quoting 6 Ind. C. Comm. 177, 207 (1958).

11 191.

12 Defendants' actions in denying the federal acknowledgment of the Chinook Indian 13 Nation are now being used to justify Defendant DOI's refusal of the Chinook to access the 14 money awarded to them by Congress and the Indian Claims Commission for seizure of their 15 land - denying the Chinook Indian Nation proper compensation for land over which the 16 government has already determined the Tribe had "aboriginal or Indian title." See Ch 214, 17 H.R. 2694, 43 Stat. 886.

18 192.

19 Despite the fact that partial payment was appropriated for and administered to the 20 Chinook by Congress and the BIA, respectively, in 1912, the Indian Claims Commission in 21 1970 determined that such payment did not constitute just compensation and awarded the 22 Chinook an additional sum of money. Dkt. 234, Ind. Cl. Comm. 56. Defendant DOI now flatly
 23 refuses to pay out that monetary award to the Chinook: "[B]ecause you are not recognized, 24 the funds with our office cannot benefit your tribe." Letter from Catherine E. Ruge, Regional 25 Trust Administrator, U. S. Department of the Interior Office of the Special Trustee for 26 American Indians, to Tony A. Johnson, Chairman of the Chinook Indian Nation (August 25, 2017). Even though the money awarded to the Chinook by the Indian Claims Commission is now held in trust by the DOI for the Chinook, the fact that the DOI refuses to release the money to the Chinook means that the Chinook, by the terms set forth by the Indian Claims Commission, have not been justly compensated for the land taken from them following the signing of the 1851 treaties at Tansey Point.

193.

As DOI Regional Trust Administrator Rugen points out in her letter of August 25, 2015, 25 C.F.R § 83.2 provides that “Acknowledgment of tribal existence by the Department is a prerequisite to the protection, services and benefits of the Federal government available to Indian tribes by virtue of their status as tribes.” She argues that because the BIA has not acknowledged the Chinook as a tribe, the Chinook Indian Nation is therefore ineligible to receive its award. However, the Indian Claims Commission made a preliminary determination of eligibility before the Chinook were allowed to proceed with their claim against the federal government. Further, when Congress appropriated money in 1912 to compensate the Chinook for land taken as a result of the 1851 Tansey Point treaties, it was the BIA that managed distribution of those funds to the Chinook. The Chinook Indian Nation has not been terminated and, further, has been recognized many times over by other branches and agencies of the federal government – including many within the Department of the Interior. The DOI’s refusal to allow the Chinook Indian Nation to access funds awarded to it by the Indian Claims Commission as just compensation for land taken from it by the federal government therefore violates the APA. It is arbitrary and capricious, an abuse of discretion, and not in accordance with the law.

///

///

///

///

SEVENTH CLAIM FOR RELIEF

• Procedural Due Process Challenge •

194.

Plaintiffs reallege and incorporate herein by reference the allegations contained in ¶¶ 1-193 above.

195.

The actions of Defendants in forfeiting the monies previously appropriated by Congress and upheld by the Courts for the Chinook and/or its members, Defendants have deprived the Chinook of a protected property interest to which the Fifth Amendment's Due Process protection applies.

196.

Forfeiture of monies that have been appropriated over 100 years ago for the Chinook and/or its members by Congress as compensation for lands seized by the federal government in the aftermath of treaty negotiations is not, and should not, be dependent upon the results of any regulatory acknowledgment decision made in 2002, especially when the decision by the Defendants to declare the Chinook's property forfeited to them was not, in fact, made until almost two years ago (August 2015) without any prior notification, opportunity to be heard, or opportunity to challenge the decision. Such an action by the Defendants should be declared by this court to constitute a violation of the procedural component of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment.

EIGHTH CLAIM FOR RELIEF

• Substantive Due Process Challenge •

197.

Plaintiffs reallege and incorporate herein by reference the allegations contained in ¶¶ 1-196 above.

///

198.

In forfeiting monies previously appropriated by Congress and upheld by the courts for the Chinook and/or its members, Defendants have deprived the Chinook of a protected property interest to which the Fifth Amendment's Due Process protection applies and which enjoys protection from the substantive component of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment.

199.

Forfeiture of monies that have been appropriated beginning over 100 years ago that were appropriated for the Chinook and/or its members by Congress as compensation for lands seized by the federal government in the aftermath of treaty negotiations is not, and should not, be dependent upon the results of any regulatory acknowledgment decision made in 2002, especially when the decision by the Defendants to declare the Chinook's property forfeited to them was not, in fact, made until almost two years ago (August 2015) without any prior notification, opportunity to be heard, or opportunity to challenge the decision. Such an action by the Defendants "shocks the conscience" and should be declared by this court to constitute a violation of the substantive component of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs pray for judgment against Defendants as follows:

- (1) On their First Claim for Relief, for a declaration that the Chinook is entitled to be a federally acknowledged Indian tribe, that it and its members are to be accorded the full panoply of services and benefits that accompany federal recognition and an order enjoining the Defendants to place the Chinook on the Federally Recognized Indian Tribe List;
- (2) On their Second through Fifth Claims for Relief, without waiving the above, for a declaration that the regulatory prohibition on petitioning for reaffirmation or re-petitioning for recognition for a tribe previously denied

1 recognition under 25 C.F.R. 83.4(d) is unlawful, unconstitutional, arbitrary
2 and capricious, and unenforceable as it applies to the Chinook;

3 (3) On their Sixth through Eighth Claims for Relief, for a declaration that the 4 Chinook are entitled to the entire value of their tribal trust account as of the 5 date of the filing of this Complaint, together with interest accrued during the 6 pending litigation;

7 (4) For their reasonable attorney fees and costs and expenses pursuant to the 8 Equal Access to Justice Act; and 9 (5) For such other and further relief as the Court deems just and equitable.

10 DATED: August 24, 2017.

11 LANDYE BENNETT BLUMSTEIN LLP

12
13 By:

14 Thane W. Tienison, WSBA #13310
15 ttienson@lbblawyers.com
16 Attorneys for Plaintiffs
17
18 19 20 21
22
23
24
25
26